Preface Remarks

This essay originally appeared in German language as Part II in my second book on Human Gnosis from 2004:

“Gnostic Tradition of Western Philosophy”

After I discovered the Universal Law in 1994 and elaborated in the next two years on the new General Theory of Science, I wrote down for a change in late 1995 a forecast on the political, economic and scientific consequences of this discovery. An extended version of it appeared as a book in Bulgarian language in 1998. Many predictions that I made there from, as it appears to me today a somewhat limited, conventional point of view, have already happened or are beginning to take shape. At that time my predictions were found by many people to be frightening, exaggerated and incomprehensible, although individual readers were deeply touched by them as they told me in personal conversations.

Shortly thereafter, I entered the last, most intense phase of the Light Body Process \(LBP\) that “bestowed” me with many physical ailments, but also with profound gnostic knowledge. Without ever intending it, I became a “prophet” of the upcoming Evolutionary Leap of Mankind – a process that is so complex and intricate as is human existence in general. Since five years I am in an incessant, conscious contact with the 7F-creationary levels that have fundamentally transformed, not just my biological body, but also my psyche.

(Nota bene: In this essay I use, for the sake of simplicity and with respect to the energetic structure of the higher dimensional realms, two terms for the higher dimensions beyond the 3rd and 4th dimension of the current holographic model: “7F-creationary levels” and “astral energies or planes“. “7F” stands for the fact that the higher dimensional energies manifest in this holographic model as seven sacred flames that come directly from the Source, whereas “F” is an abbreviation for “frequency” indicating that each flame / source energy is characterized by a specific frequency spectrum. On many occasions I use the word “astral” for these energies with respect to the language in the old esoteric literature, with which many half-enlightened persons as those belonging to the Rudolf Steiner movement in Germany are familiar. I did this in full awareness that actually the term “astral” is restricted to the 4D plane where all the archons and other dark entities used to dwell and from where they manipulated extensively the incarnated human personalities for eons of time before we expelled them in the summer of 2016 and wrapped up this plane for the actual ascending Gaia.)

I could write precise and detailed reports about every single phase of this energetic transformation would it not be for my realization that mankind does not yet have any experience with such phenomena and such a memoir, at the present stage of its mental development, would be premature. Nevertheless, I have reported in the Gnosis about various individual, mental, psychic and somatic symptoms of the LBP as to explain the psychological energetic processes of human fears reduction, which are currently happening on a global scale and affect all the people in one form or another. I could, of course, have written much more beyond that, but it would have been totally misinterpreted by my readers.

Humanity is not ready yet to be mentally and emotionally at ease and deal, fearless and unbiased, with the astral dynamics and the psychic necessities of such unknown phenomena as the LBP and the Evolutionary Leap of mankind. Only after these processes have manifested in this 3D space-time, will the people begin, willy-nilly, to deal with them since they will change their destiny profoundly. However, this will happen only after the total confusion of the masses will have reached its ultimate peak.

While I am writing this book, my emotional body is largely free from any anxiety patterns. My whole body vibrates day and night – stronger at night than during the day – with an indescribably intense astral vibration about which I have not found an adequate description either in the older gnostic or in the recent esoteric literature of Eastern or Western origin, although there is much raving there for such energies and one can find many wise advises, how one can trigger them by clever exercises. This is a fundamental human blunder committed from the position of spiritual high-esteem that one can often find in modern esotericism: Man can not bring about these astral energies, because the human mind has no power over them, not yet.

The mind can only develop an open Weltanschauung towards these energies and affirm their existence. This spiritual opening leads to the actual LBP, which is entirely controlled by the soul. If a person, to speak in the Bible language, is “chosen” as an incarnated personality to embody these “divine” energies on earth, they will begin to flow on their own. The only thing one can mentally do is to learn to deal with them, to integrate them in the physical body and everyday life by developing sophisticated strategies that protect him from being pulled down by the low-frequency energies of the environment.

In other words, one has to develop during the LBP the ability to preserve his human nature and at the same time to anchor these immense, inhuman astral energies which the biological body now harbors firmly into the 3D space-time. In view of this extremely difficult and complex task that challenges the mind and the will of the individual beyond the limit of traditional human experience, the LBP is the most highly creative and gestalting activity of the human mind. If the mind fails to cope with the energies of the LBP, then even the most powerful astral force, be it a transliminal soul or an ascended master, can accomplish nothing during their human incarnation on earth.

The LBP is thus a close co-production between the soul worlds on one side and the mind and the psyche of the incarnated personality on the other, even if the individual soul takes over the leading role in this process. The successful completion of this process by a single person decisively changes the astral-energetic structure of the entire planet. For this reason the implementation of the LBP in individual personalities is decisive for the triggering of the Evolutionary Leap of mankind on a global scale.

Also in the channeled literature of the 90’s one finds no information on the duration, frequency and intensity of the energetic waves, with which the LBP is driven forward by the astral worlds, although some remarkable technical books have appeared on the subject. I attribute this deliberate information gap back to the fact that an adequate description of the actual hardships during this transformation would deter even the bravest person. In this case, nobody would give his consent to participate in such an experiment.

Hence the astral worlds need a useful idiot like myself, who is ready to take the lead and encourage others to follow this path. In this way, humanity will be uplifted onto a new astral energetic vibration, where the present collective amnesia will be abolished. One speaks in the esoteric literature in this context of the “ascension” of the planet, but without being able to grasp this process on the individual level. It is correct that both the vibrations of the human body as well as the vibrations of the physical matter of the earth rise during the Evolutionary Leap so that a harmonious convergence between the higher realms and the 3D space-time of the planet can be achieved. This increase in frequencies changes the entire solar system as the increase in solar activity in recent years proves.

As I write these sentences, the astral energies of my light body rotate and pulsate like a huge energetic swirling field, like a kind of invisible tornado spreading spherically around my body that sucks the air molecules into the whirlpool of its vibrations. Depending on the lighting conditions, I perceive these rotating, flickering vibrations in a radius of up to 100 meters around my biological body. In the course of the LBP, my senses have gained significantly in sharpness, so that my eyesight, hearing and smell have long exceeded the threshold of sensory perception of “normal” humans. For this reason I see and hear my astral body all the time during the last five years. At the same time, I feel the vibrations of the astral energies uninterrupted in my body – from the head to the soles of my feet. As their intensity and quality are constantly changing, I have to choose each time a new different psycho-mental attitude in order to let the energies flow freely and in that way to better endure them.

My astral field is like a massive energy ball that constantly buzzes around myself and, through the friction of the air molecules, generates an unusually high-pitched vibration sound. I hear it more clearly on the left side of my head, because the astral energies flow in waves into my body predominantly through the left hemisphere of the brain as though through a funnel. I have to live with that constant vibration noise and its somatic sensation, which, depending on the wave intensity, can increase enormously and partly sounds like the whirring of the propellers of a helicopter that is rising above my head, as well as with the constant astral-energetic tension it induces on my brain, 24 hours a day and learn to endure these phenomena without burdening my environment with it.

The incarnation of a young soul as a biological organism could not endure these energies even one second without damage – it would perish in a very short time. Such young souls can only open their minds to the existence of the astral energies of the LBP, which means, they have to learn to accept them in their world view. Only at the end of the incarnation cycle, when the densest layers of fears have been released step by step with each incarnation, is the incarnated soul able to absorb these astral energies of the LBP without endangering the biological body. In this situation it is indispensable to know exactly what actually occurs. One should not be tempted to think of oneself as being ill and run to various doctors to treat the symptoms of the LBP with obsolete drugs. In this case one is hopelessly lost, and the LBP is stopped. The person concerned must usually leave the earth prematurely.

The reason for this is that the doctors who have never heard of the LBP will always invent a trivial medical reason for these symptoms and will persuade the patient that he/she is mentally or physically ill. In this way the doctors only reinforce the anxiety structure of their patients and thus interrupt their LBP, which often brings about the opposite effect. The current healthcare system is based solely on the collective suggestion of deeply seated somatic fears in the human population. The “gods in white lab coats” fondle these fears to procure power over their patients and to secure their financial prosperity. Since Moliere’s “conceited patient” nothing has changed in this respect: the collective young soul mentality knows only interpersonal relationships that are based on co-dependence and manipulation; the only thing that this mentality does not recognize is this obvious fact.

It is therefore no coincidence that my pioneering role in the harnessing of the LBP is supported through my medical education, and especially by the discovery of the Universal Law and the development of the General Theory of Biological Regulation in Volume III, with which I exposed current medical science as a lavish smorgasbord of false and highly detrimental beliefs to the patients. The bio-sciences are currently unable to comprehend the astral energetic foundation of the biological existence of all living organisms and persist in total agnosticism regarding their study object.

My effort to achieve normalcy is made even more difficult by the mentioned hypersensitivity of my senses with which I hear any, no matter how quiet, noise or perceive any faint odor, respectively the negative energies of the people in my surroundings from far away as unpleasant psychic properties. My mental, emotional and sensory perceptions have become so sensitive that to live a normal life in this most dense of fears astral atmosphere on the earth is almost impossible and this increases my unbearable longing for my home in the higher realms. And yet I am forced to bridge this energetic incompatibility between my fear-cleaned, high-frequency energy field and the fear-laden, low-frequency reality of human existence at every moment of my life consciously and to bring it into resonance. This is the actual sacrifice that I am currently committing on behalf of humanity. If it were up to me, I would have already left the earth, because I have nothing to learn here, and death does not worry me.

Every personality that incarnates on earth embraces certain individual tasks as to learn the lessons in the physical 3-dimensionality. Beyond that there are also some very old souls who are ready to accept a transpersonal assignment for the benefit of the community of souls. Such souls must be ready to neglect their personal wellbeing and concerns, and to accept hard exertions that bring them no personal gain in the conventional sense of material prosperity and social recognition.

In such a case one speaks of a mission. Jesus has demonstrated in exemplary fashion that such a mission on the earth, in the midst of a very immature soul population, is a veritable crucifixion. This is the archetypal destiny of every Savior, regardless of whether he was physically crucified or was daily martyred by the low-frequency, fear-based patterns of his environment.

As the purified, high-frequency astral energies of my light body are perceived by the people in my immediate vicinity not by their senses, but subliminal, below their day-consciousness, as an unpleasant augmentation of their own dissonances, one can imagine what complicated life strategies I have to develop to make everyday life reasonably conflict-free and achieve a modest level of normalcy. The purity of my astral field is moot, but rather a very effective condemnation of this reality that vibrates with the lowest frequency patterns of human angst.

My astral field acts as a catalyst to the fears of the people in my environment. As the people usually refuse to accept their own fears, they prefer to project onto me their unpleasant properties of anxiety and aggression that they acutely feel in my presence and to stamp me as a scapegoat. I have to deal with such situations and bear them without resentment.

This astral aspect of transpersonal relationships between normal mortals and light gestalts is very clearly expressed in the Synoptic Gospels, in which it is very vividly portrayed how Jesus, who had a similar purified, fear-free energy field as mine constantly offended the Pharisees with his mere presence and how they were compelled to engage him in shabby discussions and persecuted him with an incomprehensible hate.

The archetypal pattern of the martyr that has become the ideological linchpin of Christian religion can be traced back to this astral-energetic incompatibility. It is significant that this pattern does not apply to the official heads of the Church – Popes and Patriarchs – as these, with a few exceptions, were immature souls and still are. They lived in harmony with the low-frequency, angst-laden vibrations of their environment and, insofar as they became victims of political power intrigues instigated by other young souls, they did not embody the type of real martyr.

At the same time it is not possible for me to describe the psychological liberation and mental relaxation which the LBP brings with it despite all the physical and psychological challenges. This state of fearlessness, accompanied by long ecstatic phases, evokes in me such a clairvoyance and loving, intellectual sharpness that makes me a relaxed observer of vain earthly activity. By leaving all the entanglements behind me, which were not little in this life, and knowing of the everlasting existence of my soul, I have found my inner rest forever.

Only such a person can overcome the limitations of the individual fate and recognize this earthly life as a great experiment and a cosmic joke at the same time, whose magnificence lies precisely in its triviality. Out of this insight grows a new transpersonal ability to love that breaches all social conventions and follows only the requirements of one's own soul. This attitude allows me to indulge in my feelings and their presentation in a playful manner and engage them very effectively when needed to achieve desired psycho-mental reactions in certain persons that are highly conducive to their spiritual growth.

In these interactions that are agreed upon between me and the involved souls during the sleep phases at the astral plane and are being told to me as dreams, I learn a lot about the inner soul dynamics between emotions and actions. In such cases, I follow the guidance of transpersonal compassion and deliberately exempt myself from all artificial social norms. Sometimes this behaviour evokes the wrong impression among those affected that I would act uncontrollably or hurtfully towards them.

This tactic of active, targeted use of emotions was already pre-exercised by Jesus to his doubting disciples to keep their faith strong as one can conclude from the many stories in the Bible. In today's society amiability is generally considered to be a valuable virtue. From the point of view of the soul forced amiability represents a renunciation of honesty and a penchant for convenience. It is therefore not a true virtue, but a fear-driven, all too human trait to avoid inconvenience and social friction. In its passivity, kindliness is the incentive for many other human vices.

For this reason, there must also be brave incarnate personalities who rattle the people with unpleasant truths and extricate them from their smug and shallow existence. Such "black sheep" are especially valuable for the spiritual growth of other incarnate personalities, insofar they express their emotions in full awareness of the illusory, dualistic character of this earthly existence and do not resort to quarrelsomeness. In general, humans have nowadays a lot of angst to give free rein to their feelings and for this reason they cannot deal with other people's feelings in a relaxed manner.

In many ways they behave like assassins who prefer to commit their emotional crimes in an ambush, instead of dealing with their feelings and actions in a direct manner. This lies solely in the fact that most people have neither learned, nor recognized, the function and the meaning of a genuine experience of one's own feelings. Rather, they have succumbed voluntarily to a millennial tradition of systematic oppression of the human psyche and cannot imagine a life with spontaneous and unadulterated feelings.

This is particularly true of the Germans who are, in their majority, distinct coercive-compulsive personalities. The emotional deficits of the Germans in their interpersonal relationships are noticeable in both their literature and art, as well as in the flattening of the quality of life which stands in peculiar contradiction to the prosperity of this nation. Also their attitude to the Nazi past is particularly compulsive, especially when depleted, fear-motivated arguments are raised from a moralizing, historically seemingly impeccable position in order to condemn dissenters and put them in their proper place. In particular, the insult of the politically incorrect ones by the representatives of the "pure teaching” is a strong fear-driven emotion spiced with an unpleasant aftertaste of hypocrisy.

What the Germans are willingly overlooking is that their present ritualized attitude towards their Nazi past, which ends up in rigorous exclusiveness and stigmatization of dissenters, represents a new variant of the very original, compulsive fears of the Germans that enabled and encouraged the rise of the Nazi regime in the first place. It is cogent why such a view rather hinders the historical understanding than promotes it as it superficially pretends to do.

By contrast, the Italians are much freer and more understanding in expressing their feelings than the Germans (and most other West–european peoples), even though lately a noticeable “Teutonization” of the feelings on the Apennine peninsula is taking place. It is due to the many immature souls who incarnate in Italy at this time. In the past, Italy was a haven of old and mature souls who have decisively influenced and promoted Western art and literature.

Since human feelings are originally programmed by the soul psychic modules of the incarnated personality that are expressed with respect to external events, the newborn child enjoys already the same spectrum of emotions as that of an adult. While the child lives out his emotions in a spontaneous and unadulterated manner and has not yet learned to evaluate his feelings with positively or negatively tainted words and connotations, the adult is, in his emotions, a strongly conditioned being through human language and life experience.

Human language evaluates feelings as positive or negative experiences, although they are astral-energetic phenomena and thus neutral in value. Their assessment is based on social conventions and beliefs that the childish mind greedily absorbs and by which he is deeply influenced during his growth. As every verbal assignment of feelings is done through the mind, only the human mind decides whether a feeling is positive or negative. Thus the original feeling, which is an astral-energetic module of the psyche, undergoes a profound degradation to a mentally colored emotion:

Emotions are thus subjective, experiential, verbal interpretations of the original god-given feelings to humans.

The child begins immediately after birth to assess subjectively the feelings given to him by his soul according to the parental education and the closest role models. Love and affection are rarely treated by the child as unconditional feelings, as they exist in their original astral form, but usually as dependency patterns. The helpless and vulnerable child must buy the affection of the mother or the father through good behavior, whereas the parental criteria for adequate behavior are usually very ambivalent and confused. After all, 80% of all parents are baby, child or young souls who are guided by their fear-based patterns and to whom the feeling of unconditional love is yet totally unknown (the psycho-mental characteristics of the various soul age populations are thoroughly discussed in my book “The Evolutionary Leap of mankind”).

Very often the child has to learn that a free expression of feelings, for example an overly loud joy, is punished by the parents as inappropriate behavior. From a very early age, the children make the experience that they have to suffer for the spontaneous expression of their original feelings. They begin to evaluate their positive feelings as negative experiences and learn to suppress them as to avoid similar negative experiences in the future. This negative social adaptation determines decisively the attitude of the adolescent personality to her original feelings. From then on she interprets her “god-given” feelings like love, affection and trustfulness as a source of spiritual injuries and psycho-mental suffering.

Later on, the society takes over the deformation of the individual psyche in an even more effective and all-embracing manner. The culturally permissible interpretation of emotions determines the individual sensation of happiness or misfortune. Certain events, such as the separation from the partner will be in today’s society automatically associated with negative emotions: they usually call in the feeling of sadness and depression, even when the inner voice of the psyche signals relief and joy after ending an oppressive or disharmonious relationship.

Since the joy of separation from the partner is not “sociable”, the person in question is forced to convince herself/himself that she/he is unhappy, only because one is accepted and pitied by the environment if one behaves in the expected traditional way and does not stand out negatively. In medicine, this is referred to as the “secondary gain of disease” – the patient, in his suffering, enjoys the attention and affection of the nursing staff and the environment, which outweighs the drawbacks of the disease. In this way the original feelings of the soul are judged by external events and standardized according to unquestioned cultural beliefs.

Modern man is no longer able to live out his natural feelings unedited. The astral-energetic fabric of modern society consists of innumerable collective patterns of emotions that have become enormously rigid in the course of history, thus strongly ritualizing and constricting life in the community, even though they are only anthropocentric mental interpretations of the original psychic modules of the soul. In this respect, the universe is extremely malleable. Such collective patterns as jealousy, for instance, are indelibly imprinted into the emotional astral texture of the earth and determine human behavior significantly, though they are dispensable to interpersonal relationships. They reflect only the current state of under-development of the human mind and the chakras in the incarnated population on this planet.

For this reason, the energetic handling of human emotions is a major goal of the souls who incarnate on Earth: emotions are a specific psycho-energetic feature of humanity. There are countless incarnational modalities in 3D space-time that can be experienced without feelings.

If I violate my principles in this book and write about myself, I do it solely and exclusively based on the realisation that many readers have very little in common with an abstract discussion of Philosophy and Gnosis. The point of view that I have adopted in this gnostic essay and the processes which I describe are so novel and unique, that they are a daunting challenge for every conventionally minded reader. For many people, who will make any tangible experience with the LBP only in a future incarnation, the topic must remain strange and unusual for a while. They could only find an access to this area of thought when it is relayed to them through the prism of personal experiences.

On the other hand, such young souls will not be spared, both emotionally and mentally, from the impact of the upcoming sweeping events during the Evolutionary Leap of mankind, for these events will shape their future destiny decisively. After all, they have incarnated at this time on earth precisely in expectation of these events which they knew in an exarnated state of expanded awareness would come in the current End Time of the planetary ascension. These souls are expecting from this unique direct experience a huge boost of their spiritual evolution, even though they will have to watch them on the sideline or participate as alleged victims in the collapse of the old matrix and not in the full awareness as creator gods as all humans truly are.

Hence everything that makes the educational work easier in this direction, must be claimed here. For this reason, I will try to illustrate on the basis of some events that happened to me before the LBP commenced with full force in 1999 (It already started in 1972 with the descent of my soul into my body), how the omnipresent, omniscient knowledge of the higher-dimensional creationary levels finds access to daily human consciousness in form of Human Gnosis and what qualities and features it possesses. I begin with my description backwards as to facilitate the perspective.

In 1999 I had already completed the constitution of the four volumes on the General Theory of Sciences and felt for some time the emergence of an inner unrest, coupled with intellectual dissatisfaction and irritability, which I am used to interpreting as an unmistakable urge of my soul and the higher realms to adjust to a new mental task. I knew enough of such moods from the past. Without them, I would not have been able to set up the General Theory of Science in such a short period of time. Through many small events it was pointed out to me again and again that from now on I have to deal more intensively with the current economic theory and its obvious deficiencies. Although I analysed since early 1998 extensively the stock markets and made some theoretical breakthroughs that allowed me to predict the stock prices with an astonishing accuracy medium to long-term, I felt that this time I was entering a qualitatively new level of deep insights at the soul level.

Before I continue, I have to emphasize at this point, that such transcendental perceptions can only be very imperfectly put into words, because human language is inadequate to properly convey either the imperative intensity of the inner-soul events, or the lightning-like mental breakthroughs of clairvoyance; neither can it adequately reproduce the all-encompassing, simultaneous knowledge with which the higher realms reveal themselves to the incarnated personality in an inimitable manner and with an inner certainty that is impossible for one to escape. Also, the finely tuned interplay between feelings and abstract visions can be barely expressed in a verbal form. One inevitably reaches the limit of language as a sequential space-time medium of transcendental, multidimensional experience.

In particular, human language is not capable of simultaneity and faithful reproduction of the wholeness of gnostic knowledge. In Part 3 of this book, I shall explore from a linguistic and epistemological point of view the limitations that one always encounters in the verbal presentation of simultaneous gnostic knowledge.

It should be a truism to every enlightened person that all knowledge comes from the soul. In the three-dimensionality of the physical world it can only be expressed in a verbal form, therefore it is cogent that language, despite its structural deficits, is the only universal medium of true human knowledge. As I have proved in Part 3, any human language – its words, grammar and semantics – is entirely based on the primary notion of the linearity of space and time which is a deliberate delusion of the human mind and perceptions as created by the Creator; the former, in their turn, create this holographic incarnation model based on the illusion that humans are separated from the Source. Thus any kind of verbal cognition is sequential and subject to the restrictions of 3D-space-time, i.e. to the cognitive restrictions of conventional time t and space s, which are identical physical terms as I have proved for the first time in the history of science in the new Physical and Mathematical Theory of the Universal Law.

In fact, the soul almost never transmits her knowledge in a verbal form but usually as intuitive, simultaneous insights (Forget the numerous channeled messages in the New Age – none of them is true knowledge.). This knowledge is then available to the incarnated personality at any time and is continuously modulated by the ongoing thought process in an all-encompassing way. As one writes down this holistic knowledge sequentially, he would inevitably lose the red thread and will get lost in the maze of countless thoughts. This was the fate of most Western philosophers in the past.

If, on the other hand, one wants to follow the red thread in a logical-stringent manner, as I have extensively demonstrated in my books, one has to omit inevitably important, collateral aspects, which underpin and deepen the basic idea. The original simultaneous insight is considerably reduced in its entirety in order to fit into the given written form. The multidimensionality of the astral knowledge is inevitably lost in its verbal form of expression. This is the dilemma which every Gnostic scripture faces since time immemorial.

Nowadays human knowledge is essentially understood as a successive, cumulative process of lived experience and past accumulation of knowledge, to which new insights and fragments of knowledge are actually added, while at the same time human forgetfulness is relentlessly gnawing on this treasure trove and constantly diminishes its stock (N.B. Please observe that the scientific community has completely forgotten that both mathematics and theoretical sciences, such as physics, are in a foundation crisis since the thirties of the last century and cannot prove their validity with their own means. Precisely this deliberate or unconscious forgetfulness of the scientists has prevented the discovery of the Universal law much earlier as I prove unequivocally in the new Axiomatics and Physics of the Universal Law.)

As a result of this conventional viewpoint, we are experiencing a pervasive decline in intellectual prowess among all older people, including those who have spent their whole life in studying spiritual and theoretical matters. This intellectual decline in old age is not biologically conditioned, as it is nowadays believed and documented with various non-sensical medical terms, but merely a product of wrong collective beliefs of what human intelligence should be.

Human knowledge, in the broadest sense of the word, is a living process in which all the available knowledge is constantly present and continually transformed by current thinking. Human knowledge is part of the all-encompassing astral awareness and not a distinct entity consisting of index cards, a kind of well-organized library, which one only needs to maintain and to complement, as current ideas on education and upbringing try to make us believe. The acquisition of true knowledge is a fluid process where every single thought at the present point in time affects all the existing knowledge in a global and simultaneous manner. The entire universe, All-That-Is, operates in the same way as it is also a Simultaneous Thought.

Every thought of the incarnated personality influences all past and future incarnations and all parallel lives as probability alternatives of the soul, and beyond that the entire soul family and much higher soul configurations (N.B. In fact all soul incarnations exist simultaneously as linear time is an illusion and there is no past and future but only the eternal Now. However, this fundamental gnostic aspect of all Creation is beyond the scope of the present essay. I have tackled this topic on numerous occasions in my other books and numerous articles). This globality of thinking extends into 3D space-time, which is a product of higher dimensional thoughts. Only the human mind seems not to follow this globality of sentient awareness. In fact, the inherent inconsistency and limitation of present-day human thinking is a desired aspect of the earthly experience in the current low stage of soul evolution on this planet.

Only those who are capable of incorporating the simultaneity and globality of gnostic insights into their deliberations, are able to expand this knowledge into old age and keep it alive. Such knowledge is non-verbal in its original, astral-energetic form. In this form it is all-encompassing, omnipresent, and telepathically accessible to all souls.

The real intellectual achievement of an incarnated soul lies in her ability to translate that knowledge into a binding, generally understandable, a priori knowledge corresponding verbal form and in this way to firmly anchor it in the physical three-dimensional space-time. I have paradigmatically solved this task with the development of the new Axiomatics, which is an operative method for the building of logical, non-contradictory verbal categorical systems of human Gnosis. With its help I have integrated all separate sciences on the basis of the Universal Law into a unifying theory of All-That-Is. This scientific Pantheorie is available to me as a world view at any time and I can successfully apply it to solve any particular problem.

However, how many people are there today who display a similar complete and coherent knowledge in the areas of physics, mathematics, social sciences, economics, philosophy, literature and history, as I have proved this in my books and numerous articles, and are able to practically apply this simultaneous knowledge? I fear – not one single person! This should be though the normal mental and intellectual state of every incarnated soul. In such a case, people would have preserved their mental flexibility into old age and would not need to worry about Alzheimer's disease.

It is an elemental, undeniable fact that the vast majority of the people in the “enlightened” Western world stop at the age of twenty, at the latest at the age of thirty, to acquire knowledge and then start to forget quickly the few disconnected and obsolete facts they have memorized throughout their studies. I exclude from this consideration some very specialized skills which one can learn at advanced age. Also, the high numbers of adult and senior visitors attending post-graduate education courses cannot hide the intellectual misery of the masses. One should not measure the effective knowledge based on the numbers of hours, accumulated facts, computer data and passed exams but by the ability of the individual to perceive the larger picture behind the current angst-laden human reality and to eliminate the logical blunders leading to its deliberate obfuscation. When this criterion is applied, very few people will qualify as truly “spiritual beings”.

In old age, the intellectual interests of the people are shrinking more and more and are limited at the end of life almost exclusively to the biological functions that sustain their bare existence. This mental decline manifests itself as a convulsive, stupid clinging to life that is eroded and restricted by deep-seated fears of death. He, who rejects with fake indignation this little flattering portrayal of seniors in the developed world, I would recommend him to work as a nurse of elderly patients in order to experience their dullness first hand. The few exceptions just confirm the rule.

In contrast to the widespread misconception in medicine, such diseases as Morbus Alzheimer and senile dementia are not genetic-related degenerative diseases of the central nervous system, but rather a somatic expression of the mental decline in old age, which is purposefully triggered by the Soul. Man needs a mirror image of his Self to recognize himself. This reflection is often accentuated by the soul in the form of a disease in order to summon the human mind to deal with his image actively. Otherwise one would live out his human existence in an unconscious way and would not evolve at all.

The widespread senile dementia is thus a consequence of the primitive collective notion of young souls that only young, dynamic people are valuable for the society and the economy. This perverted misconception thrives particularly in the US, where aging is considered a shame and a tragedy and the seniors are degraded to garbage of the nation.

In antiquity, however, the old people were treated with dignity and valued for their wisdom and life experience. They stood in the middle of life and could not afford to break down mentally. It is hard to imagine Socrates sitting in an old folk's dementia home, surrounded by young students (see Plato's dialogues).

The vast majority of humanity lives currently in the Third World; for them, knowledge is, in the here discussed manner, a foreign word. They live in total agnosticism and are not capable of developing or understanding any abstract thoughts. About half of the world population consists of functional illiterates and their number increases strongly in old age. So much for the present intellectual status of the world population!

The intellectual achievement of the human mind lies therefore in its ability to present the gnostic knowledge of the astral worlds in an adequate verbal form and to implement it in daily practice. Until the discovery of the Universal Law, the knowledge accumulated in individual sciences was separated through ideological barriers and even within one particular discipline, all the findings resembled isolated islands of an archipelago in the middle of a huge ocean of Ignorance. Such fragments of knowledge are then stored as imperfect human memory and contradict the underlying, coherent, holistic awareness of the higher mind, including the human mind when it is liberated from the limitations of the ego.

That's why most people are intellectually unable to build a congruent worldview which then stays at their disposal as a memory throughout their entire life and which they can continuously refine and deepen. They can only think within the artificially set limits of their specialized training and insofar they dare go beyond that, they inevitably find themselves embroiled in a hopeless dilettantism. Most people nowadays are thinking in an extremely disconnected manner, and accordingly is their knowledge torn apart and disparate.

The same applies to the nature of the discussions on the political, scientific and economic level. The material and social results of this thinking are not less devastating. Like a shipwrecked sailor, modern man swims in a sea of Ignorance and hurries from one straw of knowledge to the next one in the hope to stay afloat in this way (In this context, I remember a channeled text that I read some time ago which addressed the ubiquitous mental human confusion: "We (the souls) are spiritual entities: Our favorite activity is to surf in the heads of the humans. We are appalled by the mental muddle that we find there. We are sad to see how humans constantly stumble over their inadequacies ... ").

Human knowledge can only expand to the extent to which it is already successfully organized on the known terrain. For this reason, the gnostic knowledge on the impending Evolutionary Leap of Mankind could be given to me only after I had collected enough experience with the current economic events so that I could intertwine these empirical findings with the psycho-mental processes and individual, fateful necessities of the LBP in a meaningful way. There were no role models for this intellectual endeavour – it was a new uncharted territory that no mortal before me had ever explored in this depth and width.

(N.B. It is notable to make the reader aware of the fact that I wrote this essay in 2004 and seven years later I opened this website and published, in addition to my 15 books, more than 3000 articles. Many of them are dealing with the actual trends in economics and finance from an overarching, transcendental point of view and are taking into consideration the ongoing waves of the ascension process which we, the PAT, experience on a daily basis as the LBP and as an energetic planetary transformation. This complex, holistic, theoretical approach to what is happening with Gaia and humanity in the current End Time is unique and has no parallel in the world literature. In this sense this essay was already a theoretical program for my future activity as the educator-in-chief of the new humanity.)

Only after I had reached this extremely high level of spiritual abstraction, was I able to understand the underlying astral dynamics behind the impending global economic crisis and follow its progression as an enlightened observer of the bottomless abysses of collective human ignorance that were shaping the destiny of the descending and ascending portion of humanity on infinite timelines (N.B. The ascension of Gaia and humanity seemed to progress in the following years superficially in a most erratic and chaotic manner, if one does not understand the multidimensional character of all creation, but with an awesome precision in the coordination from the higher realms as this was revealed to us in many messages from the Source and has been captured in the unique seamless chronicle of the PAT, the Planetary Ascension Team, the captain of which I happened to be.

Read: The Journey of the Planetary Ascension Team).

The analysis of the current events on earth required not only a full synthesis of my previous knowledge in the field of natural and social sciences with my new experience with the LBP, but at the same time anticipated some groundbreaking theoretical discoveries in the field of economics which I had to make in the time ahead. This had to be done within a short period of time at the beginning of the year in 1999.

Once all the building blocks of the mosaic were in place, I was able to recognize and accept my role in this global transformation. I peered through the inner dialectics between my ascension as the first multidimensional personality who had delivered the necessary Gnosis on the topic of Ascension in his earthly life, and the impending Evolutionary Leap of humanity, which was to reveal itself as a world economic crisis. This deep insight into the close connection between the “parousia” and the “end of the world” enabled me to clarify and stoically endure the exertions of the LBP which I underwent in the following almost two decades.

(N.B. Please observe that Jesus who is the founder of Christianity has not left a single written sentence of his teachings and everything that is part of Christian theology, including the New Testament, was written by other people many centuries later who had never met Jesus. This also includes St. Paul who is the actual founder of the Church as organized religion. Of course this argumentation is done from a conventional point of view. I know that Jesus is a mythical composite personality created by the PTW from the Orion/Reptilian empire which, by the way, we, the PAT, eliminated from this new ascended original world and is based on the historical personality of Apollo-nius of Tyana, whom I have discussed on many occasions (e.g. here and here) on this website.)

Without this intimate knowledge, I might have closed myself to the LBP and endangered the successful completion of my mission on Earth. Therefore, the gnostic knowledge that was imparted to me by the 7F-creationary realms was not just for an intellectual purpose, but was also an energetic precondition for my successful ascension. Without this event, announced in the Bible as the “Second Coming of Christ“, my new theory of the Universal Law could not be introduced, for the unbelieving humanity needs solid evidence, even more so miracles, to open up mentally and develop intellectually. It is spiritually too lethargic to accomplish this spiritual evolution on its own.

Any incarnated soul who undertakes a mission on earth is a messenger of All-That-Is and must represent the omniscience of the Whole in an appropriate form on the earth. This includes an intimate knowledge of the main protagonist of his own role, which the world-spanning dramaturgy of the higher realms foresee for him in the upcoming ascension drama. This role is not only a central concern of biblical prophecies but has also been further elucidated in some recent-date channeled messages (N.B. For further information read my discussion on biblical and other prophecies regarding my impending appearance as the new ascended master that will embody the Second Coming of Christed Consciousness and will unleash the end of Christianity and all organized religions in my gnostic book “Thoughts” that was written ten years before this event will fully unfold in 2018.)

Originally, I planned to include the new economic theory of the Universal Law in Volume IV of the Tetralogy of Science. However, I was not that far advanced in my theoretical elaboration on this topic as I would have liked to be because in the last four years (since 1995) I had been exclusively busy with the preparation and writing down of the unified theory of physics and mathematics in Volume I and Volume II and the General Theory of the Biological Regulation in Volume III. Indeed, I had succeeded in establishing the dialectical connection between Keynesianism and monetarism at the macro level from the point of view of the Universal Law, but my inner voice was telling me that I did not know yet the whole picture as to fully grasp the hidden mechanisms of current economic life.

(N.B. For further literature on modern economic theory go to the section “economic collapse” and read all the articles that contain so much hidden knowledge on the machinations of the banksters in the current Orion financial system, which was designed in the first place to enslave humanity and establish the NWO as to prevent ascension in the End Time, that it will blow you away, unless you are already familiar with my ideas. I rewrote the initial manuscript from 1997 -98 which I intended to develop to volume IV of the Tetralogy of Science into a collection of lectures as I realized the inherent fraud in the current financial and economic system and why modern economic theory is not worth to be dealt with in depth from a scientific point of view.)

This form of inner insecurity that befalls me each time in the middle of intellectual breakthroughs cannot be properly expressed in a verbal form. At the beginning of my gnostic intercourse with the higher realms I repined with such moods of insecurity, and erroneously interpreted them as intellectual or creative crises, while deploring my mental inability. However, over time it became increasingly clear to me that an unshakable faith in the consistency and adequacy of everything that happened to me, always helped me to sail over all the cognitive cliffs which I encountered in my research and to achieve with brilliance the targeted epistemological goal. In time, I became more and more skilled in recognizing the signs of the inner voice and followed them without any hesitation. This is the formula of my incredible success as a thinker and a researcher.

This kind of mental ability required a pronounced psychological flexibility that stipulated at times in outright self-denial but it saved me a lot of time and made it possible for me, despite recurring setbacks, to accomplish an intellectual achievement that I myself did not consider possible. I literally felt how I was growing beyond myself – the super-human intellectual powers that I acquired from my soul during that time also augmented my physical capacity, so that I was able to work for several years in a row, up to twelve hours a day, six days a week on the new theory of the Universal Law and to edit countless times the manuscripts, until I was fully satisfied with the linguistic, didactic and scientific form of the presentation.

That being said, I waited curiously and relaxed at the beginning of 1999 to see how the new economic knowledge that was announced by my soul was going to unfold in the months ahead.

At this point, I have to step back and describe which feelings, associations and abstract perceptions which I have been cherishing throughout my entire life have led me to the discovery of Universal Law because they are closely related to the more recent events discussed here.

Already in my childhood, and even more intensely so in my youth, I had an inexplicable intuitive sensation which incessantly whispered in my consciousness that behind the superficial reality that I was watching with alert eyes and behind all the events that I had encountered in my small private life or observed on the world stage, there was an invisible, all-embracing, all-pervading force field that prevailed over everything. At that time it was impossible for me to express this sentiment in words. And yet this force field was as certain to me as my own existence – it was an inseparable part of my Self. This existential feeling, which I, despite my talkativeness, never felt the urge to share with anybody else – so strongly did I feel it to be an intimate aspect of my personal core identity as it came and receded again and again quietly in the background, so that I often doubted its relevance. This happened every time when I was busy coping with difficult situations in my life that demanded all my attention. And every time I took a break from this reality, this inner sensation rose up from the depths of my soul.

During my military service, I had a lot of time and ease to think and I felt how this inner perception of an omnipotent force field began to materialize increasingly in my consciousness. It manifested both as independent intellectual thoughts that were previously unknown to me, as well as somatic sensations that bestowed me with the experience of a spiritual extension beyond my own physical body. I had to learn to live carefully with this condition of constant physical expansion and delimitation because it was blissful and disturbing at the same time.

Slowly but steadily, this sensation grew into an all-encompassing, pantheistic, quasi-mystical life-force, which seemed to me to be ancient and very familiar at the same time. I felt in my heart, how this feeling built an emotional bridge to the ancient world and to the Orphic tradition that had left its mark upon my homeland (N.B. Orpheus comes from Thrace, Rhodopa mountains, in the outskirts of which my native town Plodiv (older names, Filibe, Philipopolis, Pulpudeva, Pulden), the city with the oldest uninterrupted history in the world, lies in the Thracian plain amidst seven hills. It was the proud capital of the richest province of the Roman and later Byzantine empire for many centuries) and carried me away from the dreary communist reality in my country. This pantheism helped me later on immensely in my intellectual activity. At the same time, it urged me to critically illuminate and reassess the many spiritual achievements of mankind, which I respectfully admired in my youth.

No matter if I dealt with literature, psychoanalysis, philosophy, physics or mathematics, a quiet permanent inner voice always scratched at the mental harmony which I pursued in vain as my intellectual activities made me restless and thoughtful all at the same time. The disturbing and exhilarating idea that everything that surrounded me was not as real as it seemed to be, increased in intensity. It offered me a welcome emotional and spiritual escape route out of the tristesse of the “real existing socialism” (a famous term of the communist ideology at that time).

No wonder that after my military service I became an inexorable dissident and embraced all existential challenges, which such a way of life brought to me at that time. From then on, I rejected the communist society decisively and fled into a self-created Utopian world in which the individual could live without any ideological and physical constraints.

Since we received very little information about the life in the West in Bulgaria at that time, I had to reinvent this Utopian world in every detail and at the same time to make it as real as possible, because I wanted to avoid at all costs ending up a dreamer in an ivory tower. Hence I painted my Utopian world as a future probable version of the then existing communist society. To master this abstraction, I had to carefully analyze what human characteristics had led to the very brutal and repressive social order in my home country, because I realized very early that the mere implementation of the Marxist-Leninist ideology onto the political order, could not alone answer this key socio-psychological question (N.B. Little did I know at that time that with these pure ideas I was already creating the new ascended Gaia as an Elohim and Prime Creator as I began to realize this fact first in 1999.).

Already in those days I made my first important observations and experiences with human angst and with its manifold social and psychological manifestations. I realized clearly how the collective fear caused by the brutal Stalinist mass purges became the mainspring of the communist dictatorship. With the sobriety of a skilled dissector I observed how the people voluntarily succumbed to the most obnoxious distortions of reason and human decency, which the communist authorities demanded from them, and with what good will they accepted, in this subjugation, every conceivable crime, even at a time when the danger of political repression after Stalin's death had noticeably eased.

Since I was also afraid for my own life at that time due to the constant persecutions of all dissenters by the communist authorities, I had to first overcome in my psyche this legitimate existential fear, which every true dissident in Eastern Europe would confirm. I felt in an increasingly compelling way that I could only design my Utopia of a future free society in Bulgaria in a complete and satisfactory manner if I would be able to outgrow my petty fears, which I succeeded better and better with time.

Hence I imagined how the people would liberate themselves on their own from their inner utmost fears that palpably tormented them and visibly deformed their personalities, for the sake of Love of Life and their own Selves. Further on, I imagined in as lively a way as possible how my compatriots could easily tear down in the course of this Self-liberation the repressive communist dictatorship that they had built and supported with their participation, and which they feared in its monolithic appearance as an insurmountable omnipotent and threatening dungeon, and could freely establish new loving forms of interpersonal relationships.

How easily this liberation could actually happen was shown with the demolition of the Berlin Wall later on in a convincing and very symbolic way (Read here). But what the West Germans and the rest of the world willingly and surreptitiously overlooked were the walls of fear in the minds of the Ossis (East Germans) which were exacerbated by the economic hijacking of the former DDR by the Federal Republic of Germany and were reinforced by the new skyrocketing unemployment of the real capitalism that purposely destroyed their socialist economy. Later on I realized that this was all part of the sinister plan of the dark cabal to establish the NWO in Europe and in the rest of the world.

I extended this abstract exercise to the economy and came to first glimpses as to how the economic mechanisms that should bring about the collapse of the communist order would operate in the future. Some thoughts that I had developed about the phenomenon of anxiety at that time were subsequently processed in poetry. I imagined this new divine world so vividly that I designed concrete visual and architectural visions as to how the dull exterior image of my home town Plovdiv would positively change in the post-communist time. These phantasms seemed to me at that time much more alive and real than the narrow, musty and very bleak socialist reality of Bulgaria that surrounded me and that I only knew. Some of these architectural visions were actually realized later, after the collapse of the communist system in 1989, albeit their gross materialization remained far behind my ideal images.

(N.B. Only a few readers in the West would probably know that there was a binding aesthetic doctrine in literature and arts in communist Eastern Europe that was called “socialist realism”. Artists and writers were forced to create their works according to the ideological specifications of the doctrine of socialist realism. However, if one took socialist realism too literally, as Pasternak and Solzhenytsin did in their novels in the thaw time, then one was frowned upon as a “petty-bourgeois” author. “Socialist realism” did not officially mean to present the communist reality truthfully and faithfully, but to paint an idealistic image of the society according to the sterile ordinance of the communist party. No wonder that Eastern European literature and arts at that time produced only inferior works and have still not recovered from this spiritual misery.)

During this time my pantheistic feeling grew immeasurably and assumed imperative traits. I felt with an unmistakable certainty that I must take that feeling into account and to process it in an intellectual and creative way. I began to envision, beyond the national boundaries, how this invisible life force field, which I meanwhile assigned the rank of a social principle, operated behind the political reality of the Communist Eastern Bloc dictatorship and affected its decomposition. With these considerations in mind I tried to integrate the dynamics of the Cold War between the two blocks into these abstract considerations.

And lo and behold I began, slowly but surely, to perceive the overarching social currents, the subtle collective psychological shifts and social mechanisms on both sides of the Iron curtain and to grasp their global effects. Some of these observations found their expression in the poems, which I wrote during that time, although I took care not to express myself too unambiguously, not because I was afraid of the omnipresent censorship – no one wanted or dared to read my poems – but because I did not want to commit myself intellectually too much to these preliminary conclusions. I felt intuitively that there was much more that was hidden behind the veil of this superficial reality and that any mental fixation at that time would only entail unnecessary limitations upon my rapidly expanding intellectual explorations.

At the beginning of the 70's, my intellectual interests as a dissident were predominantly in literature and liberal arts, although I was very good at mathematics and physics and had deeply internalized the axiomatic thinking of classical geometry and algebra, which was intensively practiced in my school. This training in formal logic was very accommodating to my inner being and I decided to employ logic actively in order to reveal the absurdity of the communist reality.

Since logic is at best practiced in conversations, I designed my conversations in this direction. The immediate result was that all my friends and acquaintances got afraid to communicate with me and started to blatantly avoid me. Until that time, I was a very sociable person and now I had to make the experience how all of a sudden it became very lonely around me. At the same time, I recognized the benefits of this, more or less, voluntary isolation. It offered me a welcome chance to reduce to a minimum the inevitable indoctrination by the social environment which increasingly tormented my psyche and mind. In this way I was able to establish the necessary free space where I could wander undisturbed in my mental activities.

This crucial experience made me for the first time aware on a very deep existential level of the dualistic, dialectical character of every human experience. I started to perceive the superficial, illusory character of all external events and to recognize the importance of their subjective psycho-mental interpretation for the individual fate. Instead of suffering from being treated as a political leper by my friends, as I initially feared, the new situation turned out to be extremely beneficial as soon as I abandoned the usual point of view of the sociable habit of “being always together” which most Bulgarians cherished at that time and began to look at my situation through the eyes of a dissident. A concrete advantage of my social ostracizing was the lesser danger of a betrayal by friends who worked for the secret service as informers as this was most usual under communism.

At that time, I was far advanced in my literary studies. I knew the main works of world literature and could navigate confidently through the main literary trends of past and present. Literature was a substitute for me for the larger realities that existed beyond the Iron Curtain and to which I could only penetrate in everyday life through the prism of the socialist “black and white” propaganda. That is why I quenched my longing for freedom and the great free world in that era through intensive reading of important literary works.

At that time, the strong desire to become a writer flared up in me. I imagined, however, not to be a simple narrator, but intended to renew modern literature from the ground up, although the presumption of this intent was painfully aware to me. My role models were Joyce, Proust, Musil and other literary innovators of the 20th century prose, although I had to admit that the first two did not necessarily count as my favorite authors.

Like all the “moderns” of our time, I also decided to place my future literary activity on a well-founded theoretical platform that should be justified both from an avant-garde and scientific point of view. I had gained very early the impression that all the major art and literary avant-garde programs of the early 20th century hang somehow in the air and lacked completely any scientific foundations (N.B. I refer here to all groundbreaking avant-garde movements, such as futurism in Italy, cubism and abstract art in France and Germany, expressionism and Bauhaus in Germany and Eastern Europe, suprematism in Russia, later on, constructivism, existentialism, absurd theatre and so on, whose authors and protagonists borrowed lavishly and with absolutely no understanding of modern concepts from the theory of relativity and quantum mechanics with respect to space-time, simultaneity, Bergson’s concept of durée instead of linear time, etc. etc. This could indeed be a theoretical topic for another voluminous book.)

On the other hand, my inner voice was whispering to me for some time that science could be equally unproductive and sterile. This sensation increased in intensity, every time I tried to delve deeper into special topics of higher mathematics. At such moments I felt almost physically a painful mental apnea, a stabbing emotional shortness of breath, and such a strong feeling of intellectual claustrophobia that prevented me from engaging in any thorough elaborations in the field of advanced mathematics beyond formal logic and the philosophy of mathematics. For this same reason I later interrupted my original study of electronics which was highly mathematized and contented myself with an unpretentious economic study of tourism, which offered me the opportunity to dedicate myself more intensively to my autodidact studies of philosophy and liberal arts.

I had similar feelings of intellectual claustrophobia at the end of my medical studies in Heidelberg, when I felt mentally and emotionally profoundly exhausted and depleted by all the mind-numbing medical disciplines and bio-sciences which I had to learn by heart. Only retrospectively did I realize that these inner feelings that accompanied my academic pursuits were of greatest informative value because they showed me in an infallible manner, where the pathway to the ultimate scientific truth was leading me – namely, to the total rejection of all bio-sciences and medicine, which could only be achieved through the detour of acquiring a full mastery over their obsolete scientific stuff.

It is a fundamental principle of the incarnation cycle on the earth that spiritual clarity can only come after a total confusion and that it can only be the result of intense occupation and engagement with the aberrations and abysses of human life and thinking. If the incarnated personality would have had the clairvoyance of her soul from the very beginning, the soul would not incarnate in this dense 3D reality in the first place but in other higher dimensional incarnation worlds. The actual goal of each incarnation on the earth is to gather experience with the cognitive pitfalls of its 3D reality matrix in a state of total amnesia as to who we truly are – powerful immortal, multidimensional creator beings – and to unravel the mystery of life step by step.

After my escape to the West, I set forward my mental visions how to overcome the ideological and political division of Europe under more favorable conditions. Like many emigrants at that time, I too linked my fate and the recovery of my lost home country with the disappearance of the Iron Curtain, which was for me not only a physical border, but also a mental and psychological barrier. The political and ideological division of Europe pierced right through my heart and prevented me as a compassionate human being to feel whole and complete: it was a thorn in my flesh.

In order to relieve this mental and emotional pain I improved and refined constantly my social utopia on the collapse of the communist system, while I benefited from my new experiences and knowledge in the West. In my wife whom I met shortly after my emigration, I found, for the time being, a patient listener to my future vision of Europe.

Fourteen years later when the system suddenly and, for most of the people, surprisingly and unexpectedly collapsed, and the Iron Curtain disappeared within a few days from the scene, my wife noted that she, unlike all the other people and politicians, was not at all surprised by the events. I had so often discussed this political and economic development in all details with her that she had the impression that everything I had anticipated for the future of Europe was already a historical reality, so to say “a done deal” for her.

How could I clearly foresee the peaceful and swift overcoming of the division of our continent in all its details at a time when not a single normal human being and certainly not any expert on Eastern Europe believed to experience this event in the 20th or even in the 21st century and many people seriously considered the inevitability of a 3rd World War?

Meanwhile, I know the answer very well: this historical event that I intellectually anticipated was planned in the higher realms for a very long time, where many probable alternatives were available for the convergence of the two political blocs. In the end, the best and most peaceful alternative was carried out, despite some local wars as in Yugoslavia, which could have been avoided with more political prudence from the West.

(N.B. In the meantime I know beyond any doubt that the dark cabal in the West (e.g. the Bilderbergers and the US neocons) planned, not only the destruction of Yugoslavia from the very beginning, but also of all East European nations that would oppose their plan for the NWO through the expansion of the EU and NATO into Eastern Europe, and first and foremost, the destruction of Russia which they feared most. The US neocons had a similar plan also for the destruction of the entire Middle East under the guise of nation building and fake war on terrorism, which they themselves sponsored, as this has been revealed by General Wesley Clark beyond any doubt.

The NWO was successfully established on numerous lower timelines which we, the PAT, have severed from this ascending Gaia in the last years as has been regularly reported on this website. The Elohim told us that we have moved /bilocated all the time to higher timelines while many dark timelines are living in the NWO since the end of WW2 which is still ongoing or has led to the nuclear destruction of many timelines. That is why any conventional discussion of human history has to depart from the multidimensional nature of all creation, otherwise it will remain sterile, agnostic and of no cognitive value. I am propagating this concept which I have explained from many different angles on this website all the time as without this knowledge it is impossible to grasp anything that is currently happening on this planet. It is very important to stress this fact at this place as to properly understand my subsequent presentation which deals a lot with human history.)

And now comes the crucial question: Was this gnostic knowledge on the imminent change of the political order in Europe in 1989 given to me by the astral realms since my earliest youth as my destiny and personal evolution as an anti-communist dissident, active political emigrant and program editor for Radio Free Europe (RFE) during the Cold War suggests? Or was it the other way round: As an incarnated soul coming directly from the Source I was not just a passive, enlightened observer of significant historical events, but at the same time their creator at a higher level.

At this point I would like to crack the limited earthly conceptions of my readers and invite them to look beyond the visible reality and behind the veil, from where the higher realms operate. Because the answer to this question illuminates at the same time my future mission as the harbinger of the new transcendental epoch.

The history of humanity, may it be so bloodthirsty, cruel or occasionally exalted, is a collective creative act of all the souls incarnated on the earth. Those who incarnate at the present time have created the historical conditions which they now find in their previous incarnations, just as they effectively shape the current history of mankind. There are individual personalities such as Genghis Khan, Napoleon or Hitler, who have chosen the archetypal role of the general (commander) to experience the bellicose history of mankind directly and to influence it on a global scale. Even if such persons according to traditional historiography, which is a mere reflection of the value scale of young souls, are being glorified as energetic, occasionally diabolical, persons of historical dimension (how else should one explain the fascination and the innumerable books written about the life of this simple, banal and philistine person Hitler who, as soon as he came to power, inevitably degenerated to a monster), they are in fact very young immature souls who have decided to collect human experience in the brutal manipulation of the ignorant masses.

(N.B. The archetypal structure of young and unripe souls is very similar to the dark, highly manipulative nature of the archons from the 4D astral plane and all the incarnated aliens, such as greys and reptilians, from the former PTB of the Orion Reptilian empire. These dark insidious personalities are responsible for the enslavement of humanity since the fall of Atlantis and even much earlier. I know perfectly well how their dark insidious energies feel. They are very similar to the energies emanated by their political stooges in power and this is the main reason why my soul prevented me from starting a political career as I initially intended. If one wants to know how these energies feel one should visit Brussels or Washington D.C. The City of London is also a good site to observe these dark detestable energies.)).

There are other political figures who have failed from the point of view of current history, such as for example Gorbachev in the eyes of his compatriots, who are still blaming him for the collapse of the Soviet empire, but have actually achieved historically far more than other “successful” politicians of their time from the higher vantage point of view of the 7F-creationary dimensions. This ambivalence in the assessment of historical achievements can be clearly established, if one compares the irrelevance of the short-lived historical assessments in the mass media with the long-term academic discussions of these events in the few good history books.

But also the few good works on world history display an ample lack of understanding of the causative role of the 7F-creationary realms in the shaping of human history. Their judgments are limited by their narrow world view and thus of no gnostic value. And exactly this suspicion, which I have been cherishing since my earliest youth while reading such history books has been proven to be correct and true in the light of the new transcendental insights which I am receiving from the causal worlds as part of the LBP.

The material and spiritual history of humanity is not merely a product of the actions of the visible protagonists on the ground, just as a movie is not only the result of the actors who appear on the screen, but is determined to a considerable degree by the invisible presence and guidance of the film director. If the spectator would know nothing about the production of a movie, he would consider the scenes and the plot on the screen as the only authentic reality, just like little children usually do when they watch a movie for the first time.

In this case, his judgments about the movie would be one-sided and limited. He would, for example, not realize that all the scenes and actions are carefully planned, designed and put into picture by an invisible person – the film director. The dialogues are not random, but written by the scriptwriter, the camera work and the image format – not arbitrary, but performed according to certain optical and cinematic criteria, which have a long tradition of experimentation and demand a complex technical “know-how”. And so on...

The situation is similar in real life. There are always a few very old souls who leave the manifested actions on the historical stage up to the many young souls in order to collect experiences in the political manipulation of other humans and instead prefer to exert a hidden and very effective direction of the events behind the scene, that is, from the higher realms at the soul level. They do not need to stand in the limelight as the main protagonists of history. Such a life role would be contrary to their soul maturity and their spiritual needs as they know all too well that this 3D reality is a total illusion. Rather, a very old soul would usually assume a social position of minor significance or would lead a very simple life as to be able to dedicate her full strength and attention to the astral coordination of the earthly historical events.

Such old souls act as spiritual leaders of great import for big soul populations. Often the earthly personality knows nothing about her demanding light work as an “astral director”. However, depending on her needs, she can receive valuable pointers in the form of dreams, hunches and inspiration. She can meet, for example, in the dream state, with politicians and advise them at the soul level on important decisions they are supposed to make. This knowledge then trickles down into the politician’s mind-ego as daily consciousness and he usually acts in the advised manner. Such a personality possesses advanced medial skills and an infallible judgment. She acts as an outpost of the 7F-creationary realms and must be able to provide accurate analyses on the ground. These analyses go as leading thought patterns in the higher dimensional probability calculations and significantly influence all past, current and future events and timelines on the earth in a simultaneous manner because there is no linear time – it is an illusion of the human ego-mind.

That does not mean that the excarnated souls are not able of continuously making their own valid judgments on the earthly situation, because without such a feedback the coordination of life on earth would be impossible. Rather, the incarnation life on earth is decisively determined by the decisions of the incarnated souls in infinite parallel probability decisions and timelines. In this case, it is sufficient if a single incarnated personality comes to a significant insight or makes an important decision that influences the destiny of the entire humanity. (N.B. This website renders numerous proofs when major decisions and invocations made by myself and the PAT have led to significant leaps in the ascension process of Gaia and humanity.)

This decision then flows immediately into the probability calculation of the future destiny of humanity and can change it significantly. Such a decision made by a single transliminal old soul can, if it is a crucial part of the astral plan for earth and humanity, outweigh all the decisions of the active young soul protagonists who allegedly hold the levers of power in their hands, be they heads of states or bosses of big corporations. In such a case, the incarnated old soul personality does not need to come to the fore or even actively carry out this decision. This decision is acted out through telepathic contacts from the higher realms in exactly the same way as the old soul with the “status of a world observer” has envisioned it.

(N.B. In reality the situation is much more complicated as we have now entered the new original 5D world where every soul is principally capable of immediately creating its subjective reality which then appears to her as a consensual reality in which the entire humanity participates. We are entering uncharted territory of multidimensional creation that cannot be grasped by the limited human mind. Therefore the manifestation of the new original world and the dissolution of the current habitual consensual 3D matrix will be accomplished by a massive phase transition of the slow functioning human ego-mind due to the very slow processing of neuronal signals in the synaptic junctions of the carbon-based brain to a crystalline light brain that will operate on superconductivity and will be hugely expanded; it will enjoy immediate knowing and perception of numerous timelines and realities at the same time.

The current 3D matrix is a holographic illusion of the limited human mind and senses that create the 3D space-time in an a priori manner. Space and time are illusory concepts of limited human consciousness as I have proved beyond any doubt in the new theory of physics and science of the Universal Law. This is the greatest cognitive breakthrough in the history of mankind that will eliminate in the first place, present-day science, healthcare, and all organised religions, so that its repercussions will be only comprehended in the near future when these fake categorical systems of knowledge are abolished and fully replaced by the new Pantheory of the Universal Law. Current politics, economics and finance will also disappear, but they are of secondary importance as they are of recent origin and not so deeply engraved in the collective memory and behaviour of the human race.

This revolution of truth will begin by the end of this year and will explode in 2018. As soon as the human mind is expanded through the codes of the divine mind which we transmit as Elohim to all humans on a global scale in the time period of November 11th to December 12th, 2017, the outer world will change automatically as the new human being will begin to see the multiple worlds in the higher dimensions that co-exist as U-sets with this low vibrating 3D holographic model; the latter is currently in the process of rapid dissolution as any educated observer can witness.)

In this regard, the history of humanity is far more complex than humans currently assume. There are plans of the souls who are still in the incarnation cycle and plans of the parent causal worlds, as well as plans of the Source of tremendous complexity, which not even the excarnated souls can comprehend in their full scope. This circumstance explains the many confusing and contradictory transmissions on the upcoming Evolutionary Leap of mankind that have been channeled in recent years and have been widely propagated in the esoteric literature and on the Internet.

Precisely for this reason, the present disquisition does not intend to discuss the manifold energetic interactions and relationships behind the earthly existence – human language is not in the position to grasp that as I show in this book – but only to shake profoundly the limited conventional understanding of history that prevails nowadays and is decisively shaping the design of political life through fake MSM, ideologically tainted history books and other forms of inadequate human opinions.

One should never forget in this discussion the fundamental gnostic truth: thoughts are energetic phenomena of the greatest creative power and all material manifestations and events are products of thought. First comes the thought, then matter! The incarnation life of six billion souls on planet Earth is subject to careful and continuous planning and coordination from the higher realms, whose complexity, multi-dimensionality, simultaneity and precision is beyond human imagination.

The reader may have noticed that I am forced to make use of simplified pictures and associations, because the actual astral coordination of world history is in reality indescribably complex. It also includes higher, non-soul dimensions, which we as soul beings can not imagine because our very awareness as I AM Presence is tied to a soul structure. The effects of the non-soul worlds manifest as energetic phenomena that are a prerequisite for the existence of the spiritual worlds. Within the soul worlds there are always a few entities that are astral directors. They are experts who coordinate very effectively other incarnated personalities through telepathy and other astral-energetic interactions in an invisible way.

(N.B. When I wrote these lines in 2004 I did not know yet that I and my dual soul Carla are Elohim and do precisely that. Carla is an Elohim of the first cause and provides the Source energies in their purest form. I am an Elohim of the third cause and transform these energies into quantum particles and macroscopic visible forms and fields. Together we operate both at the non-soul level, from the Source, and at the soul level which extends according to my information from the 3rd to the 9th dimension. We know that we operate as human beings mainly from the 7th dimension and that the vibrations that we harbour in our physical bodies and fields are from this higher dimension. That is why our life as biological beings is so unbearable in this extremely dense atmosphere. Read also here.)

For example, in every historical epoch there are a few transpersonal souls on earth that guide big soul populations. When a soul family of about 1000 souls incarnates in a single human body as a walk-in we speak of a “transpersonal soul”. In this case, the original single soul leaves the body and the soul exchange takes place in the night or in the dream state. The new personality appears fully transformed and knows intuitively about her changed energetic template. Other people may also notice the difference in the soul essence and personal emanation, insofar they are also old souls and have an open 3rd eye.

(N.B. We have a lot of experience with walk-ins and transpersonal souls as Carla’s mother experienced almost a dozen new beautiful walk-in souls who came in and stayed for a few months or even only weeks and days. The new souls entered the body in the night or during a prolonged day nap and the personality and aura of Carla’s mother changed significantly each time when a new walk-in soul came in. Their task was to anchor our Elohim energies as a divine trinity and they used the physical vessel of Carla’s old mother for this purpose. From this we conclude that these souls came from our monad or related Elohim entities as their energies were very harmonious and fully compatible with our expanded energy fields as Elohim souls. It is amazing that I have written about this topic more than a decade ago before I made this direct personal experience with transpersonal walk-in souls in recent years since early 2015.)

The Bulgarian Peter Danov \(Deunov\), the founder of the White Brotherhood in Bulgaria and author of countless esoteric writings, was such a transpersonal soul in the first half of the 20th century. He knew that he was a transpersonal soul and has described very precisely the time and circumstances of his ensoulment as a new walk-in. He collected many old souls in the end of their incarnation cycle and prepared them for their transition to the causal worlds. Some members of the White Brotherhood were in close contact with the Bulgarian King Boris and with his closest confidants in the government and influenced decisively their wise politics in World War II. The king personally consulted Peter Danov on several occasions, although the latter usually refused to perform this kind of personal consultation.

The prophecies of Peter Danov have essentially come true. He knew very well about the upcoming Evolutionary Leap of mankind and fully embraced the idea that he was an early harbinger of this transfiguration. Thanks to the spiritual influence of his followers, known as “the Danovists” in Bulgaria, who propagated unconditional love, my country survived the Second World War under the protection of the higher realms without suffering from significant losses and destruction as this was the case with neighbouring countries, such as Greece and Yugoslavia, not to speak of the rest of Europe, although it was also occupied by Nazi Germany.

This is exactly the kind of directorial light work I am performing as an incarnated soul “full-time” since my birth. I collected a lot of different life experiences, trained myself intensively in science, literature and liberal arts and acquired an extensive political and historical knowledge, which I was, however, not allowed to directly apply in politics. My soul had effectively prevented me from engaging in politics for many good reasons, which I could only retrospectively comprehend.

A prerequisite for being a messenger of All-That-Is is not to let myself be hijacked by any earthly events and stay above human drama on earth. Although I have studied and followed very carefully past and present history of humanity, I had to take all possible precautions that politics did not misuse me. My mission as an incarnated personality is to rise above everyday events and herald in the New Age. It was not always easy to resist the seductions of our time and accomplish the impossible spiritual splits – to be fully anchored in the present on the one hand and on the other hand to uphold the transcendence of my spiritual existence in every moment of my life and live it out without compromise in a most hostile world.

In this way, I acquired as an incarnated personality the necessary competence that enabled me to support my soul in her overarching coordination and creative light work on a global scale. If I speak of my soul at this point, I simplify the actual conditions in the higher realms for didactic reasons. In reality, I am carried forward not just by a single soul, but by the concentrated force field of the causal worlds (between 7D and 9D and eventually to 12D and the Source), whose representative I am on earth, whereas at various periods in my life different higher dimensional authorities have taken the leading role and guided me on the ground. One should not lose sight of the essentials in this discussion: the 7F-creationary realms are Unity (Oneness), and the souls are individualized functions of All-That-Is.

Since 1992, my gnostic exchange with the higher realms had intensified significantly and I was busy full-time discovering the Universal Law and developing the General Theory of Science. It was a real drudgery, especially during the sleep phases when a lot of gnostic knowledge was transmitted and processed. During that time, my attention was exclusively focused on science and my vivid interest in politics faded into the background. This creative period lasted until 1999 when I finalized the four volumes on science (Tetralogy of Science, see left column of this website).

After that I entered the most intense phase of the LBP that additionally increased my clairvoyance and mediality. Since I had more time and leisure to observe the political and economic events that happened around the globe, I began receiving very clear and lucid dreams from my soul about my mission as a spiritual guide of humanity. These dreams give me information about numerous astral encounters – sometimes several encounters per night – with important politicians and other decision makers of our time, such as religious leaders.

Very often the discussions with them are very exhausting, because they, being young and unripe souls, behave in an unreasonable manner and first reject my suggestions. It takes a lot of energy to convince them. The topic of our discussions always concerns meaningful decisions which my interlocutors have to make, but struggle with these decisions. Shortly thereafter the persons whom I have met in the dream state act according to my recommendations and I get every time a feedback on the media. In this way I know specifically and exactly what directorial work I have done at the soul level in this or that political decision of great import.

(N.B. Since I opened this website in 2011, I have reported quite a few encounters with prominent politicians in the dream state in connection with my ongoing analysis of the political events. For instance, I have met with Putin, who is also a walk-in of a very powerful transliminal soul, several dozen times since 1998 and at the beginning our encounters were rather problematic. This is not at all surprising as we came from opposite political camps. While I was a political dissident in Bulgaria, he was an asset of KGB as a student in Petersburg and later on became a KGB agent. Putin is one year younger than myself but unlike myself he was not compelled to waste two years in compulsory military service as I did, most probably because he was a KGB asset already at that time as the Soviet Union also had a compulsory military service for all young men.

It is a curiosity that I was accepted at the same time as a student at this same university in Petersburg to study electronics because I was the best in the national exams in physics and mathematics for entrance at Bulgarian universities in 1970. I had not applied to study in Russia but the state authorities registered my scientific achievements and suggested that I should go to Russia to study there which was considered a great privilege at that time. Since I knew too well that there I would be asked to enter the KGB which recruited all intelligent students, and as I had already decided to live a life of a dissident, the very idea of going to Russia, the dark citadel of communism, was abhorrent to me. Some of my class mates who accepted this proposal and studied in Russia later became KGB agents. The irony of human destiny is that if I would have accepted this lucrative proposal, I might have met Putin as a student who studied at that time at the same university in Petersburg, which was then called Leningrad.

And the irony goes on. Between 1985 and 1990 Putin was a KGB agent in Leipzig, East Germany which was occupied by the Soviets. I lived as an anti-communist political emigre in West Germany since 1975. In 1980 I established close contacts to the Polish opposition and to some of the most intelligent and courageous dissident young men who established KOR, out of which later Solidarnosc emerged. I helped them promote their ideas in the West at a time when nobody took any notice of this important dissident movement in Poland that later played a crucial role in the toppling down of the communist empire. In 1985 I worked as a program editor for Radio Free Europe at a time when the KGB allegedly organized a terror attack, a small explosion at the main entrance of the RFE building in Munich, which was the chief enemy of the Soviet empire with its anti-communist propaganda. In the meantime, I know that this was another false flag of the CIA that runs RFE, but at that time, in the middle of the Cold war, this version seemed plausible.

In early 1989, while Putin was still working as a KGB agent in Leipzig and was in the end busy burning secret files before the Soviets left East Germany in 1990, I was the first emigre to establish contact to the emerging political opposition in Bulgaria which unfortunately was, much to my dismay, infested and manipulated by the Bulgarian secret services from the very beginning (see below). After the fall of the Iron Curtain I was again the first political emigre to visit Bulgaria and was one of the founders of SDS (UDF, Union of the Democratic Forces) which later on toppled down the communist regime in Sofia and came to power but failed to fulfill its promises. By then I had stopped my political activities as I was busy discovering the Universal Law as I describe below.

I mention these facts as to show that for a very long time Putin and I were on the opposite sides of the trenches and viewed each other as enemies, which illustrates what a monkey theatre human incarnation life is on earth. I remember very well when the new walk-in soul, which is a dear soul mate of mine, came into Putin's body shortly after he became president of Russia and we walked happily together along the cobble streets of the Kremlin in the night and had a very warm and peaceful conversation. This happened in a lucid dream state and I remember vividly all the details surrounding this encounter, which I already knew from my previous visitations to Moscow.

The miraculous success of Putin in the following years to contain the obnoxious plan of the dark western cabal to install the NWO can be explained with the immense energetic support he and Russia are receiving from the higher realms and from all incarnated old and Elohim souls on the ground who represent the human nexus to the Source. I have discussed this aspect on numerous occasions on this website as it is the key to understanding modern politics in the current End Time of ascension.)

This transcendental gnostic knowledge helps me predict future political developments with much more clarity and precision than any other political expert is currently capable of. An important feature of my recommendations as an astral director at the soul level is that they often contradict my judgments as a compassionate incarnated human being. Many political decisions, which I classify in this life as absolutely wrong and condemn them strongly from an ethical and moral point of view, such as the criminal war of the USA in Iraq, are advocated by my higher self for dialectical reasons in the astral realms. While being freed from the duality of earthly events, I recognize in the dream state the dialectical necessity of such “negative” decisions and events for the spiritual evolution of the persons involved, for instance why the Americans must suffer a defeat in Iraq and the Middle East in their reckless foreign policy in order to learn their karmic lessons (Read also this excellent essay on the same topic which I wrote in 2001 shortly after 9/11).

It is remarkable that I always speak in the dream state the native language of the politicians I meet – very often in English, when I meet with English or American politicians, or Russian, if Russia is at the center of my astral activity; and of course German as I live in Germany and dream most of the time in German language (I stopped dreaming in Bulgarian language about one year after emigrating to this country and since then I have dreamed in this language only when I visited my home country.). In such cases, I admire after awakening, how perfectly, for example, I can speak Russian and I profoundly regret that I have failed to learn to speak this language at school as excellently as in my dreams, although I am perfect in reading and understanding spoken Russian and actively contributed to the Russian translation of my popular book on the Universal Law. Also my French and Italian language skills improve noticeably during such astral conversations and when I wake up I can remember exactly every single sentence that I have said in the dream state in these languages.

Now the reader should not interpret these encounters too literally. Such decisions are actually made at a much higher energetic level, where direct encounters are not necessary, and all such important trans-personal energetic decisions, in which I am decisively involved at the soul level, are merely presented to my human mind symbolically as human encounters in the dream state. The dreams that I receive from my soul, are a scenic processing of higher dimensional decisions, where I am involved as a spiritual entity of a higher order and where forms do not exist (This is the case from the 6D upwards).

Dreams are therefore translations of higher dimensional energetic interactions in the optical-verbal symbolism of the human mind so that they can be heard and understood by the awake human consciousness as a dream memory. In my case they convey in a visual or verbal form crucial information about the upcoming terrestrial events which are 3D manifestations of these formless decisions of the participating souls in higher dimensions. In this way, I gain intimate insights into the hidden coordination of all political events on the earth and how the interpersonal relationships are coordinated and guided by the higher realms.

At that time, I commenced with an elaborate retrospective analysis of my life and was able to gain many valuable and deep insights from the soul perspective into the actual goals and tasks of my current incarnation. Usually such evaluation of the incarnation life takes place only after death in the higher realms (in Celestria), where the earthly personality is largely released from the energetic captivity of her earthly fears and can acquire the full awareness of her soul.

In addition, such evaluation promotes the gnostic knowledge of the personality. For this reason, most people experience on the verge of death, a significant boost of their memory. Long forgotten reminiscences flicker quickly in front of their inner eye and allow an intense review of the entire life. This final retrospective prepares the incarnated personality for her astral existence after death, where the evaluation of past lives takes place under much more favorable energetic conditions. This process usually lasts one year according to earthly measurement of linear time as in the higher realms linear time does not exist. Only after that the deceased personality can open to the higher realities of the soul worlds and recognize her own comprehensive identity.

But since I will ascend soon and my astral field is largely free from anxiety patterns, I can do this evaluation during my lifetime, especially because I will be entrusted with other much more demanding transpersonal tasks after my ascension, so that I will not have any spare time (understand energy) to elaborate exclusively on the analysis of my present incarnation.

This combination of lucid dreams and retrospection of my past life allows me to re-appraise my astral role in the collapse of the communist system and in overcoming the division of Europe. I realize that I am not a passive observer, as it looks outward, but rather an active director of the well-known historical events that continue to run in the everlasting Now of the higher realms and are being constantly modulated. This also explains my obsession with political issues and visions for several decades – an activity that I dismissed as somewhat foolish after discovering the Universal Law when I identified myself exclusively with the scientific aspects of my expanded multi-personality.

My soul also guided me several times physically to certain places where fateful events of historical scope took place and gave me specific indications of what would come next. For instance, my soul navigated me in the spring of 1989 “purely coincidentally” to the city Titova Mitrovica in Kosovo one day after the government of Milosevic had withdrawn the autonomy of that Yugoslavian republic. It was a Sunday, and a big demonstration of the Albanians took place against this decision. The center of the city was besieged by regular troops of the Yugoslavian army so that my wife and I could not drive any further.

As this decision came as a surprise and the press had not yet reported the abolition of Kosovo autonomy (the world took at that time no notice of what was happening in Yugoslavia, as the West was too busy managing the rapprochement with the Soviets in the time of perestroika or to hinder the Germans to find a peaceful agreement with the Russians), I took the opportunity to join the people on the streets and engaged them in conversations. I learned, much to my surprise, what had actually happened. The Albanians were very excited and one could feel the explosive, almost hysterical mood in the air. Hardly 20-30 minutes had passed when we heard all of a sudden how the soldiers began to shoot at the demonstrators. We were the only western witnesses of this mass shooting, in which as I later learned several dozen people were killed. I pushed my wife into the car and drove back as fast as possible. Luckily the road to Montenegro, from where we had come, was still free, so that we could leave the town in a few minutes.

Back to Croatia and Slovenia I spoke with several Yugoslavs about the shootings in Kosovo which I witnessed firsthand and wanted to know what they thought about this crucial event. All conversation partners invariably showed such appalling indifference and callousness, combined with gloating that the Albanians got what they deserved, and reacted so defensively and were outright hostile to my questions and comments on the political consequences of this event for their country, that I came to the conviction that Yugoslavia would collapse very soon and would become the hotbed of terrible fratricidal wars.

As soon as I returned to Germany, I called several well-known journalists and reported on what I witnessed in Kosovo. It was, after all, the first mass shootings during demonstrations in the Eastern bloc after the Prague Spring and I expected as a journalist that such a message would be worth a major publication. Not at all! The journalists in Germany expressed the same indifference to what happened in the “distant Balkans” as the rest of Yugoslavia did with respect to Kosovo. This callous attitude was adopted shortly thereafter also by the western politicians and became the main trigger of all wars that accompanied the collapse of Yugoslavia.

The political “evil”, to use the warped vocabulary of present-day politicians, is always the result of the lack of sympathy and compassion for others. Had the West acted more carefully, informed and sensitively with respect to Yugoslavia in that initial phase, all the subsequent wars in this country could have been prevented. First of all, the Western politicians should have mitigated the fears of the Serbs that they were surrounded by enemies, whose only aim was to dismember Yugoslavia at their expense, as this actually happened later. The West Europeans should have offered the Serbs as early as in 1989, before the Fall of the Iron Curtain, a new federal perspective within the framework of Europe, to curtail and keep the Serbian chauvinism of a small clique of rogue dissidents in the Serbian Academy of Sciences, whose members like Karadzic later participated in the atrocities in Croatia, Montenegro and Kosovo that were actually committed by all parties involved in these conflicts.

(N.B. It is therefore a shame that the western cabal then summoned the international court to condemn only the Serbs for the numerous atrocities which were committed by all sides and in particular by NATO that bombed a sovereign country without any legitimation and against international law as to divert from this stark truth. In fact, this international court (The Hague tribunal) is a veritable kangaroo court where the accused are condemned before trial and where facts do not count. No wonder that some of the defendants died under mysterious circumstances in prison or were poisoned recently in the court room, so that they are not in the position to reveal the truth when the political circumstances change. This is what the dark western cabal is doing excessively and ubiquitously all over the world with all bearers of truth that might reveal their crimes and the body count soars into the millions.)

Instead, Genscher and the German federal government hurried shortly thereafter driven by shortsighted, selfish reasons – to legitimize and secure the sovereignty of the newly united Germany – to recognize unconditionally the unlawful secession of Slovenia and Croatia from Yugoslavia after three bloody wars which the two countries started with the help of the West against Serbia and convinced the Serbs in their worst fears.

(N.B. That is why it is a blatant hypocrisy when now Germany and the West condemn the peaceful and most democratic unification of Crimea with the motherland after a criminal Nazi coup d'etat was sponsored in Kiev by the EU and the USA and these thugs of the West planned to commit genocide on the entire Russian population in southeast Ukraine. After this attempt failed, they blamed the Russians for an alleged invasion in Ukraine and started with the new Cold war and sanctions that are even more dangerous than the old Cold war. The West did not hesitate for a second to destroy the sovereignty of Yugoslavia in 1989 and 1990, and later on bomb the sovereign country of Serbia in breach with international law, as it did with numerous other countries in the Middle East, Africa and other places in the world. This happened at a time when one would have expected that relationships founded on peace and good-will would thrive between East and West after the collapse of the communist system and Eastern Europe had fully embraced the neoliberal, allegedly “free market” economy model of the West, which is in fact a criminal cartel of western bankers and dark cabal of the deep state as I have explained in numerous articles.)

The experience I had during my short visit in Titova Mitrovica (now this town is called only Mitrovica as the heritage of neutrality of Tito has been fully abolished) made a decisive impact on my political analyses. Half a year before the fall of the Berlin wall and the collapse of the Eastern Bloc I discerned the birth pangs of revived rabid nationalism in Eastern Europe, stoked deliberately by the dark ruling cabal in the West, which would accompany the post-cold war political processes that reshaped the map of the Old continent, as well as the lack of any interest of the West in a genuine, fair and constructive convergence of the two blocs. Until that event I was essentially more optimistic and benevolent in my assessment of the West because I had grossly overestimated the intelligence and the vision of its politicians.

I began to ponder whether the Western, capitalist society is also doomed to perish like the communist order in Eastern Europe. Up to that point in time I did not seriously consider this possibility, in particular because this outcome was considered inevitable in the Eastern bloc for ideological reasons: the idea of the “rotten capitalism,” which was expected to fall down any time, was a worn-out common place of the communist propaganda. A few years later, with the discovery of the Universal Law, this conjecture crystallized into certainty.

This event illustrates in a convincing way how the human soul anticipates the destiny of the incarnated personality. Although Yugoslavia was a neighbor of Bulgaria, I knew for a long time almost nothing about its domestic policy. Compared to the hermetically sealed Eastern Bloc and especially to Bulgaria, Yugoslavia was for me a free country whose citizens were allowed to leave it to work in the West and bring foreign currency back home. Tito had fallen out with Stalin after the war. Since then, he had always managed to maintain his independence from the Kremlin, so that, in my view, the country had no major political problems, but had to be envied compared to my homeland.

Again by “pure coincidence” (N.B. Please observe that this is just a human expression as there are no coincidences in All-That-Is and definitely not on the earth. Everything that we experience and observe is the result of the most precise planing and coordination of our souls from the higher realms who also create the illusion of this 3D holographic model), I met an old Serbian journalist in Radio Free Europe in 1985. He wrote political analyses on Yugoslavia which were used by the various national broadcasters under the umbrella of RFE. Radio Free Europe did not have a special program in Serbo-Croatian language for political reasons. The country was considered quasi-western at that time.

This seasoned colleague drew my attention for the first time to the national, political, ideological and economic tensions in Yugoslavia and showed me how little I knew of this country. My inner voice told me that I should quickly close this gap in my knowledge. I seized the opportunity and read all the political articles and analyses which my Yugoslavian colleague had written about his country over the previous ten to fifteen years. He was delighted and flattered by my attention, because usually nobody was interested in his articles. Yugoslavia was no longer a blank spot on my political map as its inner politics gained increasing complexity in my world view.

Unlike most Western politicians who, long after the powder keg of Great Serbian nationalism had already exploded, continued to look upon this Balkan country through the rose-coloured glasses of the obsolete Yalta Conference as an “independent State of the third kind”, I knew about the immensity of the national hatred in this multinational state and could easily imagine how quickly this hatred would turn into civil wars.

Obviously, my soul knew that, despite my inner insights, I had appraised the political world situation more optimistically than was appropriate. As so often in my life, she gave me an opportunity to rectify this error by arranging encounters with suitable persons, from whom I could always learn something new. I could report many exciting stories about such “random” encounters. After my information exchange with my Yugoslav colleague in 1985 in RFE, my soul waited four years until the opportunity arose to travel to Yugoslavia.

Originally, I did not intend to go to Kosovo, but wanted to visit Macedonia, since I am of Macedonian descent and had never been in Macedonia before. My transit through Titova Mitrovica turned out rather by accident, but I can very well remember which outer and inner circumstances led me to choose this route and itinerary. Anyway, my soul had so masterfully and unobtrusively arranged this journey that I could become a surprised witness of the first spark that turned into a conflagration and affected not only Yugoslavia and the whole Balkans, including my homeland, but also Europe and the entire world.

The war against Serbia was the first NATO deployment in a former communist country after the end of the Cold War and documented in a convincing way the political and military defeat of Russia in its traditional geopolitical sphere of influence which up to that moment was neither challenged by Western Europe nor by the USA. The gateway for the eastward expansion of NATO and EU was thus wide open. The West didn't need to care anymore about Russia and could ruthlessly progress with its hegemonic expansionism to the east. In this way the ground was laid for further wars on the fringes of the former Soviet empire with the aim of containing and destroying Russia as its successor.

It seemed to me as if I was catapulted into the political haggle of the 19th century that turned the Balkans into a playing field of the Western powers and introduced the notorious term “Balkanization”. I could hardly escape these déjà vu experiences. And once again the Germans in Berlin took over the role of the “honest broker”, as Bismarck once did at the Berlin conference when the obnoxious and unjust partition of Bulgaria was imposed on my country after the Russian-Turkish War had led to its liberation from the Turkish oppression. True to this despicable Prussian tradition, united Germany took over the division of Yugoslavia with the early recognition of the secession of Slovenia and Croatia from Yugoslavia, in a reckless manner and out of pure selfishness. In this way the Germans proved to be the notorious arsonists-recidivists and true heirs of the Nazis who put the Reichstag on fire as a false flag and then blamed three innocent Bulgarians for that crime in order to rectify the usurpation of power and the crackdown on the opposition in the post-Weimar republic.

The war against Yugoslavia encouraged the military strategists and neocon-hawks in the US to abandon their reluctance and to violate decisively the Russian sphere of influence in Asia and the Middle East: a new advantageous development for them of which they did not dare even to dream during the Cold War of mutual assured nuclear annihilation. Under the pretext of fighting terrorism, the Americans incited neo-colonial wars in Afghanistan and Iraq to secure the strategic oil reserves in Central Asia and in the Arab world, and thus to be able to extort energetically Europe and Asia and prevent the rise of Russia and China. The third millennium started as a remake of the late 19th century – with the redistribution of the commodity colonies in the world.

At that time, in 1989, standing in the centre of Titova Mitrovica and witnessing the mass shootings, neither I nor anybody else could have guessed that this small, shabby town would become the second Sarajevo of an undeclared 3rd World War of the last remaining superpower against the rest of the world (N.B. Only later did I realize that this was all part of the egregious plan of the dark cabal in the West to install the NWO and prevent our ascension and that of Gaia to 5D and higher dimensions because they themselves are doomed to stay on lower timelines and sponge on our energies as humans.)

Gnostic knowledge is completely different from written knowledge mediated through channeling. Such knowledge is simultaneous, holistic and non-verbal. The mere looking up at the great truth captures the psyche and the mind with such power and intensity that all everyday emotions, sensations and thoughts suddenly seem insignificant and irrelevant. The certainty and clarity of such knowledge is of astral-energetic nature and does not need any rational arguments or proofs: it goes beyond the narrow horizon of the human mind and expands its limited thinking beyond all reservations.

The pantheistic feeling of an omnipotent force field which I perceived since my childhood behind all earthly events, blazed constantly in my consciousness and with the years captured more and more my thoughts. This process did not happen in a continuous and steady way, but always occurred abruptly, triggered unexpectedly by external causes. It seemed to me as if this inner, all-dominant intuition behaved like a fir, which as soon as it is freed from the shopping net suddenly stretches its branches which then must be carefully decorated in order for the fir to enlighten with splendor on Christmas Eve.

Even though my pantheistic, energetic feeling never left me throughout my entire lifetime, it always showed different qualities and expressions that added together like mosaic pieces to a splendid picture. In order to bring this process to a completion the soul takes a great deal of time, in fact, as much time as the incarnated personality needs to gather the necessary life experience as to grasp the essence of life and make sure she understands her inner truth.

While during the first conscious years of my life I perceived this pantheistic feeling as an unerring existential intuition which I lived out in everyday life with the ease and carelessness of a child, this sensation became with time more abstract and arduous until it finally evolved to an intellectual problem.

One day when I was still living in Bulgaria, I decided, shortly after I had put up with a long and arduous life of a dissident, to raise this primordial idea to the rank of a natural principle so that I could keep it separate from my personal, psychological and somatic perceptions. With the help of this mental trick I intended to liberate this primordial idea from the inherent subjectivity of my individual experience and to bestow it with a universality that was rationally founded. I suspect that all basic philosophical ideas, including the concept of God, were created by such motives.

It is a peculiarity of human thinking always to depart from single things in order to reach to conclusions of general validity. We owe the development of science to this dialectical ability of human thinking.

I clearly realized that this decision would bring about serious theoretical consequences for my future intellectual endeavours. From this point on, I stood under the huge pressure to prove, one way or another, that this principle that I postulated both for organic life, including human existence with its manifold manifestations, as well as for inanimate matter was of universal validity. How could I be able to unite under one common denominator the ample disarray in my personal existence and all the kaleidoscopic images that this meaningless life displayed around me? And what role should science play in my intellectual endeavors? If there were such a natural law, why hadn't it been discovered earlier? Was such an undertaking possible at all, or was I rather running the risk of wasting my life with empty fantasies?

Unsettled by all these disturbing questions, I looked with mixed feelings at the inefficiency of Marxist ideology, which at that time offered a deterrent example. This theory adorned itself with the predicate of being scientific (as scientific Marxism), wherever it could, and raised in all seriousness the universal claim to be able to render a scientifically correct explanation for each and every social and economic nonsense that the nomenclatura in the Eastern bloc experimented with. The Western reader has no clue how many theoretical works on the so-called "scientific Marxism" were produced in the East and how many scientists and research institutions were busy elaborating on the universal scientific claim of this ideology in order to justify its application in all areas of life.

However, I soon rejected these fears, because I felt comfortable and protected in my abstract thoughts. Any attempt to stop them and start thinking in a "reasonable" manner ended inevitably in a pronounced unease, which my soul generously poured into my psyche. I have been held by my soul on the short leash since early childhood because the tasks that stood in front of me as an incarnated personality and of which I had only a vague premonition at that time were indeed enormous and tolerated no delay.

Since I also felt the inner, but not yet proven, certainty that science somehow interpreted in a fundamentally wrong way all the facts of the physical world and biological life, I presumed that with the help of a thorough education I would be successful in that area. Unfortunately, my ignorance in bio-sciences and modern quantum physics hindered me in those days to implement this project immediately into action. In addition, I was still rather inexperienced in philosophy. On the other hand, I knew already then that all philosophers, since ancient time up to the present day, had dealt with abstract questions regarding human existence and thus had developed metaphysics, from which modern physics had originated.

The path through philosophy meant for me, in contrast to today's view on the subject in the West, no rejection of exact sciences. I felt intuitively that in order to solve this problem an introduction through philosophy would be easier and more satisfying than the direct way through science and rushed first into that area. I enjoyed the breadth and limitlessness of the philosophical approach which I quickly appropriated. By now I realize that the ability for abstract philosophical thinking is a privilege of old soul age and cannot be provided by young immature souls even if they exert abstract mathematical or scientific professions.

Years later, I met again “by (no) coincidence” a well-known philosopher. He argued that unlike in other scientific fields such as mathematics, in which a person reaches his best performance at the age of 20-25 years, a mature achievement in philosophy is only possible at the age of 45 years or older. He had studied the achievements of the main Western philosophers from the point of view of their age, and argued that one needs a certain amount of life experience as to distance himself in a sovereign manner from the superficial reality and develop the capability of abstract intellectual thinking.

This statement carved deep traces in my consciousness and I can fully confirm it for my development. I accomplished my mathematical top achievements in physics when I was 18-19 years old. A quarter of a century later I went back to this knowledge to reform and unify physics on the basis of the Universal Law. This achievement was essentially of gnostic-philosophical nature, yet it also built upon the mathematical-physical skills that I had acquired in my youth. Without this theoretical knowledge I would not have been able to reach the necessary level of abstraction and to derive in laborious detail all known physical laws and formulas from one universal equation, or more precisely, to derive them from the Primary Term of human consciousness and explain them, for the first time in the history of this science, from an epistemological point of view.

My previous mathematical achievements were thus amalgamated over decades with the slow and steady acquired propensity to think in abstract philosophical categories. This created a unique synthesis of intellectual contents that came to a fruition at the age of 43-45 years, after having already collected numerous experiences with all the sciences. This spiritual evolution ran parallel to the continuous opening of my seven body chakras, which is completed in an old soul at the end of her incarnation cycle just before the age of 50 (7 chakras X 7 years).

By contrast, the majority of the currently incarnated personalities experience during a lifespan the maximal opening of one to three chakras depending on their soul age. That is why most humans are disconnected from their souls and the Source and are incapable of acquiring any gnostic, transcendental knowledge in the way it is described in this disquisition. For this same reason the LBP begins with the opening of the heart chakra that is closed in most humans and disconnects the three lower chakras from the three higher chakras. The heart chakra then encompasses the three lower and the three higher chakras into a unified chakra which is the main energetic prerequisite for the ascension of the individual. I have discussed these energetic processes extensively from the scientific point of view of the Universal Law in my first gnostic book “Evolutionary Leap of Mankind” which I wrote in 2000 – 2001.

Already at that time, an inner voice kept whispering in my ears that I should look around everywhere, but I should not go too deep into any area of scientific knowledge as otherwise I would experience the same claustrophobic feeling that I knew from my intensive occupation with higher mathematics. Frankly, I did not like at all the role of the “jack of all trades”. I was bitterly reproaching myself for my, as I believed then, “scientific superficiality”, as I also paid in those days homage to the narrow specialization in science as the best intellectual solution ever.

For that reason, I decided to look around in all sciences without any reservation only for a limited period of time as to have an overview of human knowledge, before I could decide in which area I should definitely go into more depth. Under these premises of an explorative, autodidactic universalism I rejected all artificial limits, conventions and prejudices in science and society and behaved like a buccaneer on all seas of spiritual knowledge. This momentous decision which I fatefully follow since then felt immediately as liberating and very gratifying. My soul pointed to me in her unmistakable psychic dexterity that I was on the right track.

From the chorus of many inner voices that I was hearing at that time, one stood out particularly clearly. It whispered incessantly that I, despite all my scientific and theoretical occupations, should not lose connection to the real, vibrant life and turn into a bookworm. The message was clear and unambiguous: I should continue to study politics, sociology, history and economics and gather experiences in these areas of life.

This requirement was supported by my decision to become a writer at that time as I considered it self-evident that a good writer needs extensive, sometimes also abysmal and life-threatening experiences as for example Dostoyevsky or Solzhenitsyn, whom I was reading secretly and admired for his courage, and with whom I shared a deep soul mate connection, before he should embark on the literary presentation of life. On the other hand, I did not particularly like the role of the martyr. I thought it was stupid – and hold it today as firm as then, now that I have fully understood the mentality of young souls – to physically sacrifice myself only to establish an example as a persecuted dissident for my dumbed down compatriots.

The urge for sacrifice was prevalent among the dissidents in communist Eastern Europe at that time, and I remember how years later, when the system collapsed, an alleged Czech dissident who lived in Germany on the back of his wife, accused me in all seriousness that I was not a real dissident, because I had not been in a communist dungeon. My argument that the communist system back then needed occasionally intelligent dissidents who were clever enough to escape arrest, otherwise they would not have been able to exercise their opposition activity at all and nobody would have noticed that there was any opposition movement was rejected by that guy with great vehemence and indignation.

Any kind of sacrifice we meet on earth and often interpret as courage and selflessness, is essentially an unconscious urge of the individual, under preserving the camouflage of a socially acceptable virtue, to end up his life prematurely as he cannot cope with the daily challenges of his incarnation. The myths which the people create around such sacrificial acts are excessively manipulated both in religion as well as in politics, as to keep afloat the inherent martial tendency of the majority of young souls. This also holds true for all forms of false patriotism where young people are expected to sacrifice their lives for a corrupt government, and we know in the meantime that there are only corrupt governments on this planet. Many conflicts on earth, such as in the Middle East and in Iraq, where suicide bombings of Muslim martyrs are daily on the agenda are nourished by this pathological psycho-mental attitude. This results in various karmic entanglements which are merely an image of the narrow, distorted world view of the persons involved.

As I excluded political sacrifice as a life alternative, I decided not to betray my spiritual and ethical principles and do nothing that was contrary to my self-esteem, and instead to do everything that was beneficial to my spiritual evolution as an independent sovereign personality. One consequence of this attitude was that I renounced all my social and professional ambitions, since their fulfillment would have inevitably forced me to adapt to the communist ideology and subjugate myself to the repressions of everyday life with its many small and big fears, dependencies, and human negativity. With this determination, I gained my mental and physical self-sufficiency over the socialist reality and distanced myself spiritually and mentally increasingly from my subservient compatriots.

After I had dropped my studies of electronics in 1972 (see below), I took over a heavy physical job in warehouses for half a year, which no one wanted to exert voluntarily, even under repressive sanctions from the communist authorities, so that there was a great need for physical labor in that area. The management was glad to have me as a worker, it paid relatively well, considered me a useful idiot and left me in peace.

This experience confirmed my conviction that it was possible to survive even under a communist dictatorship where the destiny of the individual was regulated in every detail, and at the same time to reject totally this society and not make any compromises. As a side effect, I strengthened my physical condition noticeably. This physical strength, of which I take care ever since, helped me later to endure surprisingly well all the exertions during the discovery of the Universal Law and the development of the General Theory of Science. Also at present I am drawing power for my LBP from my former physical condition.

My uncompromising attitude as a dissident went much further than all that what the people in the Eastern bloc did or deemed necessary to do in order to rebel against the system. If they would have followed approximately my example and had boycotted the system in a similarly total and sovereign way as I did it without putting themselves in danger, there would not have been any communism since long time and we would not have waited until 1989. Incidentally, this objection applies nowadays also to the people in the western world: it is the key to rejecting the current limited, pecuniary social order and building a new society of Love.

Would the citizens in the West discard the modern national state with its intermediary, pecuniary structures that are built up upon dependence, greed and manipulation as consistently as I have done it with conviction for many years, they would easily end their exploitation by the tax system and fraudulent financial banks, their oppression by the undemocratic governance of state institutions, their manipulation and exploitation by employers, anonymous board members and shareholders that condition them to fear-based species.

How difficult it is to follow my example will be shown by the upcoming sweeping events, and I have a lot of understanding for these hardships, but not for the current angst-driven behavior patterns of the young souls, who created these difficulties in the first place. Only when the people are ready to overcome these collective patterns and beliefs they will be able to successfully build the new society of love and abundance.

As one can see, I had to learn very early to carefully integrate the many, seemingly divergent tendencies of my soul into my everyday life, which, of course, I did not always succeed, but with age became better and better, because I possess the rare gift to assess my powers and prowess with an astounding precision and not to fool myself as most people do. This ability for a ruthless self-assessment helped me all the more as I was in my life often overwhelmed by my duties and taxed my physical and spiritual powers to the utmost. It helped me with the many exams that I had to take during my studies in order to progress in society (not in science), as well as in the selection of the readings that I chose for my autodidact studies.

My correct self-assessment is in part the result of acquired discipline since early childhood and in part my soul's achievement that is paired with another ability which I call the “voice of inner truth“. No matter whether I read or hear something, I can judge with no hesitation whether it is true or not, whether the presentation is congruent or a distortion of the reality. Except in those cases, in which my soul involved me in the most surreal situations with the aim of gifting me with unusual experiences. These “black-outs” of my rational mind were inevitable and in hindsight I can understand exactly how my soul triggered these karmic entanglements through the elimination of my rational thinking by overemphasizing certain psychic weaknesses in order to deconstruct my ego. This kind of direct knowledge makes you very, very humble.

This spontaneous, direct recognition of what is true and what is not true is a privilege of very old souls and is as rare as a diamond. It is a manifestation of their mediality and the result of their many thousands years of incarnational experience.

I have observed this ability in this pronounced form, except in myself, so far only in one other person – in my wife, who is also a very old soul although she currently vehemently resists this insight. However, her ability of spontaneous recognition does not manifest as abstract knowledge, but only in the field of literature, arts, religion and human knowledge. Her practical wisdom is very much engaged in details and for good reasons fixated in this side of life. At the same time her wisdom is so deeply rooted in her soul that she can allow herself the naive guilelessness to be cheated by every crook around the corner without being seriously perturbed by this kind of human treason because she recognizes and accepts with an infallible and natural intuition the transience and vanity of illusory earthly life. With this attitude in life, my wife glides effortlessly like a seagull over the existential storms and swims like a fish in all depths of earthly existence. She is also a gifted psychic and uses the astral symbolism in a very confident and imaginative manner. In the Dark Ages she would certainly have been burned as a witch at the stake.

Ironically, this infallible a priori judgment, what is true and what is untrue, what is correct and what is distorted, caused great soul perturbations in my psyche. Because I could not rationally explain to myself why I judged negatively the many significant and renowned literary works after I had read a few pages and was unable to overcome the inner resistance to read them to the end. I made myself vehement reproaches about this attitude, which I considered to be an expression of my ignorance and inner arrogance and feared that thereby I am infringing upon all the commandments of objectivity. It did not help. I had to put up with it, otherwise I would have been literally torn apart by the inner tension, which the reading of such, as I could later recognize, meaningless works triggered in me.

Meanwhile, I use this important intellectual manifestation of my soul, for which I am very grateful to her, extensively in an almost instinctive way. It saves me countless aberrations and mistakes, even if they generate at the same time many inconveniences and friction with the environment. Because I cannot explain to the people why I consider the many art and literary works, things and actions that they highly value or love to do, as nonsense and junk.

This “voice of inner truth” reveals itself to me neither quietly nor lovingly, as many light workers would believe in their esoteric delusion, but operates with the hammer method of somatic and psychological extortion. It was my Cicerone, my Vergil in my erratic passages through the earthly underworld. It was my relentless tormentor every time I refused to follow the predetermined path of my mental and spiritual evolution. Looking back in order to assess what spiritual ability helped me most to discover the Universal Law and to unravel the Gordian knot of science, I would definitely name in the first place my “voice of inner truth”.

How does this voice actually feel when I ignore it? It transforms with a monstrous elasticity rapidly into an internal psycho-mental tension pain, which grows and condenses into a tangible wad in my body that encompasses my whole being and affects it in a very unpleasant manner. This all-encompassing sensation captures all my senses, thoughts and feelings and directs them with an omnipotence which I cannot escape in the predetermined pathway. If I follow my voice of the inner truth voluntarily, the physical pain turns into a loving well-being and I feel a happy mental wholeness that imbues my thoughts with gratitude and satisfaction.

Only later I learned that this experience is described as the “middle pathway” in philosophy and especially in ancient Gnosis, although I could not find anywhere an adequate description of the mental and psychic dynamics the leads to this experience. One only comes across secondary arguments of reason in favor of balanced feelings and thoughts, whereas this balancing is very often confused with moderation, and sometimes with mediocrity.

I decided to express, in a literary manner, this recurring sensation that always accompanied me in my introspection at that time, and in 1974, I wrote the following lines:

“The TIE
With intellectual prescriptions and forced decisions
Is cut by a deeply rooted premonition
In the existence of an innate strong collision
That leads us to the Orphic Greek tradition
And proves how true the voice is of an
ARTIST’S INTUITION. ”

With this all-encompassing transcendental feeling that appeared to me as ancient as humanity and coupled with a full conscious renouncement of the ego which my decision to live a life of a dissident in constant danger and outside of society entailed, I came to the west where I could now pursue, safe and carefree, my intellectual endeavours. I felt so free, unbound and nimble-footed as never before and hovered like an eagle with outstretched wings over the hardships of my immigrant life. Nothing could shake me or stop me.

This constant mental ecstasy, which accompanied my first impetuous years in exile, ebbed slowly towards the end of my medical studies, only to hit me again with full force during the discovery of the Universal Law in the 90’s. This mental lightness and certainty in the predetermined fate carried me over the inadequacies of everyday life in the West and gave me the strength to catch up on the fast track all the necessary knowledge and experience that were denied to me in my previous twenty-four-year imprisonment in the socially most underdeveloped country of the Eastern Bloc and Europe. I was about to overtake the intellectuals in the West at full speed in the right lane of the spiritual highway (which is forbidden on European highways) and wondered myself about this fact.

Only today I recognize in retrospection what gargantuan cosmic forces have always accompanied my earthly life and made me, notwithstanding my sociability, into an unusual loner in the midst of social bustle. All my life I have been obsessed with a vision of Love and a longing for this Love, which, as I now clearly realize, could never be experienced in a physical body because it is from another world. Had I not lived in the illusion to realize this blissful state one day on earth, my life that was already very exhausting would have become unbearable.

In this way, the incarnated personality is constantly and deliberately “cheated” by her soul and chases one chimera after the other until the “fool” perceives at the end of his incarnation the cosmic joke behind every human existence and can no longer be fooled by the soul. He begins consciously to identify with his soul and leaves for ever the whirlpool of karmic experiences.

While my spiritual inner life thrived in the West to my full satisfaction, I decided to define the long-cherished pantheistic feeling of an omnipotent force field behind all existence as the “principle of elasticity“. I transposed this principle which I first felt in my inner being onto the historical stage and envisioned it to be the linchpin of the anticipated collapse of the communist system. This happened shortly after the latter had attained the peak of its hegemonic standing on the world stage with the signing of the Helsinki Accords in the summer of 1975. I designed my future version of a united Europe in great detail by making use of my incremental knowledge of the western society. I intertwined the political, economic and social processes of the upcoming political conversion of the East into a coherent image, which I constantly refined and deepened until it fully satisfied my “inner voice of truth”.

Another notable “coincidence” was that only a few weeks after the signing of the Helsinki Accords with which the pinnacle of communist expansion of the Soviet type of society after World War II was ratified by the West, I undertook my daredevil escape to the West via Helsinki. First the Finnish police wanted to extradite me to the Russians as they had usually done with such political refugees in the past. However, I referred to the “third basket” of the Helsinki Accords on human rights and made the Finnish policemen aware of the fact that they would violate my individual civil rights should they extradite me to the Russians. This would mean that the host of the Helsinki Conference where these documents were signed and of which their country was so proud, would violate them only a few weeks later and what impact this would have on the world. This argument, with which the Finnish policemen must have been confronted for the first time, amazingly helped me to dissuade them and they left me free under the condition to leave the land immediately. What happened afterwards is a very dramatic story with which I will not deal here as this is not a thriller but a literary novel of the gnostic literature genre. In this concrete case, my fate was linked directly in a wondrous manner to the political world history and served as a test case for its future development, as this happened in Titova Mitrovica and on many other occasions.

The pitiful person of my theoretical disquisitions in the not too distant political future was at that time my wife who, immunized by her ten-year sojourn in a Catholic monastery boarding school for girls, endured my soliloquy with the same angelic patience with which she was accustomed to bear the escapades of the virginal secluded nuns in her school before her benevolent attention backfired at me in the form of utter rejection, as this is the usual reaction of most agnostic or unenlightened people when they are confronted with transcendental truths. Fortunately, before I lost her as an attentive listener, my political prognosis was almost completed and, look at that, the events began to unfold with a breathtaking pace in the direction I had prophesied.

A decade after my flight, when the old guard of party secretaries in the Kremlin began to die one after the other and Gorbachev surprisingly made it to the top, I realized with an inner certainty that the time for the realization of my utopia had arrived. As an editor in Radio Free Europe, I wrote several analyses in the summer of 1985 on the impending crisis of the Soviet empire, in which I recognized Gorbachev as the chosen executor of the political collapse of the Eastern bloc. My elaborations were met with fierce resistance by the responsible people at the RFE.

They were a miserable bunch of one-dimensional young souls, who were very comfortable with the primitive interpretations of a senile, failed Hollywood actor and the then president of the USA with the sonorous name Ronald Reagan and did not even dream to begin thinking in a more independent and critical manner. This mediocre show master was eager to turn professional politics of the 20th century into a cheap show and had just claimed dramatically through the bullhorns of Western MSM that he had recognized “the empire of evil” in the form of the Soviet Union.

(N.B. The Americans have always been con men in falsely denouncing and accusing all other people and nations for the vices and crimes that they themselves possess and excessively live out. Call it double standard, bigotry, hypocrisy..., human language does not have enough negative words to describe the despicable, obnoxious behavior of the US dark cabal that run the deep state. What is most deplorable is that these negative primitive traits have tainted not only the vast majority of the population but also most of their more critical voices who are incapable of overcoming the rabid US nationalism and exceptionalism which is another form of utter ignorance and stupidity with respect to the rest of the world and especially with respect to the multidimensionality of All-That-Is. The reason for that is that the USA is the biggest conglomeration of agnostic young and unripe souls. They display all the negative service-to-self vices that are causing now the downfall of the old Orion matrix and will be soon abolished in the new original world.)

I remember a very instructive story on this occasion which occurred a short time later, after I had already left RFE. At that point in time the impending tumultuous events that fundamentally changed the political map of Europe were still like the faint echo of a distant future music. One should have a look at the European political map before and after the fall of the Iron Curtain to visualize the diversity of the newly created states in Eastern Europe and to internalize the actual historical upheavals after the end of the Cold War: they are bigger and more extensive than the national and political shifts after World War I, when most East European states emerged after the dissolution of the K.u.K. monarchy (Austrian empire).

To celebrate the successful completion of the 2nd state exam as high school teachers, my wife and I, together with other colleagues of hers were invited by their headmaster to a dinner at his home. It was one of those warm summer nights of the year 1987, which made life in Munich so enjoyable (notwithstanding the Chernobyl catastrophe that had contaminated significantly Bavaria and accelerated the collapse of the Soviet Empire) and we dined in the garden of the senior student teacher (Oberstudienrat), whose house was in the south of the Bavarian capital.

This man embodied all the virtues and angst-laden vices which a Bavarian civil servant was supposed to possess according to the official specifications of the State. He tried to mediate conscientiously these alleged qualities as applied state doctrine to his young colleagues and prospective teachers. Underneath, deeply buried, however, a friendly, lovable being was hidden for decades, which he had tried to suppress with the greatest inner-soul tension as to pay tribute to the ideal image of a Bavarian civil servant. Until his soul drew his attention to her existence in the spring of that year and played him the usual karmic prank, by bestowing him with a sudden stroke. In the face of death this man was entirely transformed. He shook off all useless official virtues of a state servant from his personality like dust off his clothes and transformed himself into a lovable person who he was from the very beginning. To this metamorphosis we owed the invitation to dinner.

After the meal, the conversation turned to the current political situation in Eastern Europe, upon which also the destiny of Germany decisively depended. The host asked me as a former Eastern bloc refugee about my opinion and in this way a stimulating discussion ensued. Caressed by the warm starry night and somewhat tipsy by the good wine, I designed my vision of the upcoming collapse of the Eastern Bloc. The company listened with interest and asked many questions which I answered with ease and visible pleasure. I felt clearly how a peaceful and thoughtful mood descended upon the company and enveloped it. It lent my words a persuasiveness that they had rarely achieved before, and I realized how the hearts of my listeners began to open due to the dissolution of their soul incrustation. Nevertheless, the host secretly whispered to my wife at departure that, though he was very impressed by my presentation of the future events, he did not believe that this beautiful vision would ever become reality. So much political pessimism dominated the German souls at that time that they were still completely burned out after the defeat in World War II.

Three years later, shortly after the Berlin Wall had peacefully fallen and the unification of Germany became a reality, my wife happened to meet the same “Oberstudienrat” at Marienplatz in the centre of Munich. He approached her and told her enthusiastically how vividly he remembered every word which I had said about Europe’s political future during my visit at his home, and how often he had discussed this conversation with his wife now that my forecast had come to full realisation: “How did your husband know all that so exactly?”, he wanted to know from my wife: “Finally all professionals and politicians were so utterly wrong in this regard!”. “Well, yes,” my wife answered, “That’s right, I do not know myself either. I can only say that he has so often told me his vision of the unification of Europe that I can no longer distinguish his prophecies from the reality and it seems to me as if the current political development is the most natural and logical thing in the world.”

Why am I talking here so much about my prophecy concerning the peaceful unification of Europe? And what do my profane predictions of transient political events, may they be so far-sighted, have to do with the eternal questions to human existence? Very much, as it turned out shortly thereafter. Firstly, because my political prognosis illustrates the intricate pathways as to how gnostic knowledge reaches the incarnated personality while she unfolds linearly in the current timeline and collects experiences on earth. Secondly, because they reveal the connective, holistic omnipotence of all gnostic knowledge.

Who would have guessed that with the precise prediction of the unification of Europe, which was immensely supported by my soul, my duty was done, is greatly mistaken. My actual tasks started only afterwards. All foresight I was capable of and all the predictions that I made up to the 90's were just a prelude to the actual transcendental knowledge, which I was supposed to obtain first with the discovery of the Universal Law. There were, so to speak, preparatory initiations that I had to pass before my soul had the certainty that I possessed the inner strength to face even bigger challenges. In this way, the soul builds a hurdle upon hurdle in careful consideration of all that which her incarnated personality can endure and cope with it in order to stride the "pathway of the heart" and the "pathway of knowledge" up to the very end.

Already in the spring of 1989, I made contact with the political opposition in my homeland, which had begun to organize timidly under the control and surveillance of the communist secret services in Sofia and Moscow. In full consciousness about this unpleasant fact, I nevertheless offered my service as a mediator and made the newly created opposition parties and their self-proclaimed leaders known to the Western public, in the hope that this new development would unleash a popular upheaval that could not be controlled by the headquarters of the communist party in Sofia and would eventually lead to a true democratic revolution in my home country.

The first opposition parties in Bulgaria sent their political programs and ideological elaborations by fax to Radio Free Europe, where they were received by a friend of mine and analysed by myself. This former colleague was punished by the director of the Bulgarian Radio by being expressly transferred from his original position to do this “ungrateful” job. This fact speaks volumes about the delusion that prevailed at that time at Radio Free Europe concerning the actual situation in Eastern Europe. Although these people spent 45 years waiting for this historic moment of political conversion to finally happen, they deliberately missed it when it actually came, as it also happened in all relevant Western institutions and intelligence services.

This was my chance. Although I had already left the radio four years before and was successfully doing clinical research in the pharmaceutical industry, I still had close contacts to some journalists there who shared my views. At that time, I became the second headquarters of the Bulgarian editorial office of Radio Free Europe. All documents that were received from the Bulgarian opposition, be they parties or independent trade unions, landed on my desk, for lack of interest on the part of the radio management. I translated and edited them and sent them to the headquarters of numerous western political parties and other relevant organisations. I did an in-depth analysis of the political programs of the many newly formed opposition parties (over 50 in a few months) that sprouted like mushrooms after rain.

I quickly realized that all programs were soulless and plagiarized from each other so that they could only be the political product of agents-provocateurs, whose threads were pulled by the secret services in the background. I realized that the fragmentation of the political landscape was intended and directed by a higher authority. Notwithstanding this unpleasant fact, I helped the many self-proclaimed representatives of these so called “opposition” parties, to become known in the West as the new democratic political elite of Bulgaria. I did that without ever coming to the fore, in the hope that when the political broom would start to sweep as the masses began to revolt, all the secret service spies and informers who had already occupied the starting blocks of a new political career, in unison with the spies of all other East European countries, would be swept away by the people in a democratic process.

As it turned out later, I was much too optimistic in this regard because I had grossly overestimated the political maturity of my compatriots. While in East Germany the cleansing work was taken over by the Wessis (West Germans) and performed with the typical thoroughness of this former Nazi nation, the Bulgarian secret service infiltrated all top positions in the newly established parties and spoiled thoroughly the political transition in my homeland. They organized new forms of post-socialist, neo-capitalist crime syndicates in the Chicago style of Al Capone in the 20's and thus systematically poisoned the social and political life in Bulgaria.

The people quickly discovered the charm of an overt, cynical parody of a democracy as a new style of a political vaudeville, in which even former kings were allowed to play the role of the hapless prime minister with full support from the West.

At the end of 1989, I traveled as the first politically active emigrant to Bulgaria, a daring act, which in the face of the then still very powerful and highly criminalized secret service of communist Bulgaria, was extremely thoughtless and careless as it turned out in hindsight. I will skip all the peripeteia around my arrival in my homeland that accompanied the turmoil surrounding the execution of Ceausescu in neighboring Romania. When I arrived in Sofia, I met with the self-proclaimed "leaders" of the Bulgarian opposition parties and was fully confirmed in my assessment that they were not real dissidents and opposition democrats, but shabby spies infiltrated by the Bulgarian secret service. I very much hoped that the people of Bulgaria would soon recognize this obvious fact and would get rid of these despicable upstarts.

Not at all! In this regard, I was so wrong as never in my whole life. Many informers in the opposition later became heads of government, presidents of the republic, ministers and MPs, even after their dossiers as former communist spies were published, and prevented a genuine democratization of Bulgaria wherever they could. They embodied all that is usually described as “the scum of humanity”.

And what did the Bulgarian people do at that time? They allowed and bleated with pleasure like a herd of sheep, to be led by their butcher to the slaughterhouse. The Bulgarians still think seriously today that they live in a democracy just because they can complain freely about their politicians who continue to fool and deceive them wherever they can, without being immediately imprisoned as under communism. Sancta simplicitas!

And what did my soul do in this bitter hour of truth? She quietly let me have my negative political experiences in Bulgaria and then she quickly pulled me out of circulation. During my stay in Sofia, she sent me severe pneumonia, out of the blue, which I neglected at the beginning, so that upon my return in Munich in January 1990, I suffered from a recurrence. The “wave with the fence post” (a German saying) could not be overlooked. I interpreted my serious illness as a somatic expression of my deepest disappointment with the political developments in Bulgaria. I did a turnaround and said goodbye to all my political activities. This decision was not particularly difficult for me since I felt for some time increasing discomfort with any form of politics. My inner voice had been whispering to me for a long time, that it would be a pity and a waste of energy, to continue engaging in politics. On the other hand, I had been doing this for so long that I somewhat regretted that I had to renounce my political activities at a time when communism had just collapsed.

This pattern of a fateful turnaround repeated several times in my life. As soon as I have accomplished some significant achievements in one area, and then on the cusp of reaping the fruits and carrying them home, my soul mercilessly pulls the carpet from under my feet. The first time when it happened, I fell into a deep depression, which as it later perspired, turned out to be a soul catharsis, a full descent of my soul into my physical body that prepared me for my future transpersonal mission.

A soul catharsis, even though it superficially manifests as a deep depression, is actually a profound soul phenomenon, whereby the earthly personality is touched by the divine expression of the Source. Such a process can only be endured by old souls at the end of their incarnation cycle, because it represents a tremendous mental and emotional challenge for every incarnated personality. At the same time, it is a necessary initiation that prepares the willpower of the personality for a future transpersonal mission.

However, I was not prepared for this catharsis, so that it hit me with the concentrated force of a powerful earthquake. I experienced my catharsis at the age of 21 when usually the second chakra opens slowly. In my case all seven body chakras opened at the same time and I experienced such a tremendous expansion of my personality that I lost the ground under my feet and no longer knew who I was and what I was searching for on this planet. All my existential fears came up and plunged me into a deep spiritual depression.

The peculiar thing about a soul catharsis, is that it comes out of the blue and is not triggered by any external circumstances or hardships, as is the case with an ordinary emotional depression. This makes dealing with it so particularly difficult because it defies any “common sense” and contradicts any previous experience.

I was just discharged from military service, had a relaxing summer vacation behind me and was looking forward to my studies in electronics at the Technical University in Sofia. As soon as the semester started, the catharsis hit me. First I felt an unbearable psychological resistance against studying, as well as an almost physical aversion to attend the courses. This perception was all the more surprising, as mainly mathematics and physics were to be taught, and since I was very good in both disciplines, I assumed that my studies would be fun.

Quite on the contrary! My psychologically-induced episodes of apnea, which I already mentioned above, increased noticeably as soon as I entered the lecture hall, so that I had absolutely no drive to listen to the compulsory lectures. Nonetheless, I continued attending the lectures for several more weeks until my physical power finally abandoned my body and I had to give up studying. I did not understand at all what happened to me and just had the impression that I was controlled by an alien force outside me. I returned back home, and the catharsis struck me, much to the horror of my parents who were young, unripe souls, and who were stunned by this phenomenon.

A soul catharsis goes always with a descent of the pure, astral-energetic personality structure into the psyche that is associated with the earthly personality. While the astral matrix of the psyche embodies the Ideal Self, which forms the inner core of the incarnated personality, the psyche, being an image of this Ideal Self, is fundamentally shaped and deformed by earthly life both in a conscious, as well as in a subconscious manner. That is why the human psyche is almost never healthy: it is through the many conditioned low-frequency anxiety patterns of the environment deeply damaged and vibrates with dissonant frequencies.

The conditioned earthly personality must incorporate, during the catharsis, the pure, high-frequency, harmonic patterns and properties of the Soul Matrix. In this energetic sense, the soul catharsis is a massive descent of major soul and spiritual aspects coming into the physicality of the individual, who is energetically transformed forever and becomes a remarkable exception on earth. This energetic transformation can only succeed when the earthly personality is ready to radically reject everything experienced up to this point in time, including conditioned opinions, beliefs and behavioral patterns which she considers part of her being, and replace them with the higher-frequency psychological and mental property patterns of her ideal astral Self.

This energetic transformation manifests superficially as a deep depression, in which the old behavior patterns that are genetically stored in the cells, come up to the surface; the affected person experiences them speciously as unpleasant sensations and properties, before they can be irrevocably deleted. This experience represents a tremendous psycho-mental exertion and can only be endured by very old souls. Similar processes also take place during the LBP.

From an energetic point of view, very strong polarizations occur incessantly in a wave form in the emotional and mental body during this psychic conversion in the course of the LBP or a soul catharsis. They are perceived by the individual as very unpleasant contradictory feelings and thoughts: rejection and affection, hatred and love, clarity and confusion, all race in rapid succession before the inner perceptual horizon and are extremely exhausting on mind and body.

Even though the mind recognizes the superficial character of these fleeting, antagonistic emotional states, it happens quite often that it is temporarily overwhelmed by their chaos. In such a case, I recommend a very simple method to overcome such difficult conditions. One must first realize clearly that such unpleasant, depressive experiences are transitory in nature and do not belong to the core of his being. For that reason, one must envision during such a strong wave of polarization in his psyche, how he builds an emotional bridge to past blissful circumstances which one likes to remember and then brings over this memory into the present. In this way, the soul mentally bridges the current unpleasant phase of polarized emotional transformation. The mind can now decide whether it is more comfortable to resonate with the frequency of the pleasant memory, and erase the unpleasant one, or to be pulled down by the low-frequency vibration of the unpleasant emotional pattern allowing the depressive mood to enter.

These are the kinds of decisions and choices which the human mind has to make in every moment in the Now, with respect to emotional sensations that come entirely from the soul as important modules of gnostic information. Very few people, and even fewer spiritual persons, recognize the importance of a strong, critical and discernible mind for the proper evaluation and experience of our “god given” human feelings. Most humans are so overwhelmed by their emotions, which are fear-tainted original feelings, that they act according to their emotions, without any critical assessment of the situation. This is the case with all young unripe souls. Due to esoteric indoctrination many light workers who are old souls tend to overvalue their emotions at the expense of a strong mind which they have never bothered to develop in the first place, as this is associated with a lot of mental effort, as this essay clearly shows. Hence, intellectual laziness is at the core of every spiritual failure.

The energetic background of such a mental exercise is that feelings and thoughts are timeless energetic phenomena and can only be modulated in the present moment. The mechanism behind it is practiced by the incarnated souls in repeated incarnations on earth, so that it can be learned to perfection. We owe this astral-energetic objective of the soul the evolution of the human mind to a seemingly independent decision-making authority that could allegedly exist without the soul. As every enlightened person should know, this is an utter illusion. In its negative version, the soul-rejective mind manifests as agnostic ego. As present-day science is based on agnostic empiricism that rejects the existence of the soul, one should not wonder why scientists are among the most egotistical, narrow-minded persons on this planet. Altogether the interaction between mind and psyche, being the sum of all original feelings and fear-based emotions, is a most creative process and the foundation of current human incarnation.

For this reason, all children are driven by their souls to practice very early the playful handling of feelings, by taking on certain fictional roles which they live out emotionally. Unfortunately, many parents suppress them and look upon such games of their children as “out of touch with the reality” due to wrong reasoning. In this way, they prevent their children from dealing creatively with their feelings or severely constricting them in their expression, and thus substantially inhibit the development of a fear-free personality in the child. In this way, the child's psyche is systematically deformed by the parents, who are in their vast majority young souls, and are entirely driven by their fears. This is the main problem of the current population of incarnated souls on earth.

Such mental exercises, as in the method I suggested above in overcoming a depressive phase during a psychic transformation, requires enormous willpower. Even if one does not always succeed, the regular application of this method considerably mitigates the negative subjective perception of a depression during such profound energetic transformations in the course of the LBP.

Similar mental transformations that are accompanied by depressive bouts, can also be observed in young souls, even though they never reach the intensity of a soul catharsis, or the LBP in old souls. In view of that, the therapeutic approach of present-day psychiatry and psychoanalysis is totally opposite to my recommendation, and thus fundamentally wrong. The psychiatrists and psychoanalysts of our time search for the causes of a depression in past negative experiences of the patient. Their therapeutic approach is based on the emotional elaboration of past circumstances for this depression in endless therapy sessions which only reinforce the low-frequency emotional patterns of the patient that have led to this depression in the first place, and thus prolong and deepen the depression. The doctors then conceal their failure with the prescription of psychotropic drugs, with which they additionally suppress the emotional potential of their patients.

Luckily many depressed ones recover by themselves once the depressive phase of psycho-mental transformation, triggered by the soul, is completed. As I said earlier, all such transformative depressive episodes are transient as the soul has no intention to kill her incarnated personality with endless depressive moods, but only to raise her vibration in the process of her evolution to a transgalactic multidimensional personality. The doctors know nothing of that. Instead they claim that this self-healing is the success of their therapy and the patients should believe it.

The purifying process of the psyche and the mind is extremely violent during a soul catharsis and leads to the total rejection of all previous habits and views of the person. Because these individual properties are essentially a reflection of the accepted social morals and customs, the cathartic personality must inevitably reject her milieu in a radical manner. In a state of compelling clairvoyance, she suddenly realizes that the collective patterns of behavior with which she grew up and which seemed so familiar to her so far, do not belong to her essence and evoke only disgust and rejection.

The most moving description of such cathartic processes one can find in Dostoyevsky's novels, even if the author does not know explicitly the overarching emotional energetic imperative. He experienced his soul catharsis during his execution, which was lifted at the very last moment and then continued to experience it in his exile in Siberia. Without that profound personal experience, he would not have been able to depict so masterfully in all possible shades, this unique psycho-mental state by different protagonists in his novels in a literary fashion, which exceeds in its compelling precision all the dull, sterile descriptions of depression in textbooks on psychiatry and psychology. He had the advantage to know how a soul catharsis felt at the personal level and what erratic inner soul dramatics drove it, while most of the doctors that treat similar psychic states are young souls and have no clue about the soul and her overpowering energies, as they manifest in the emotional field of the incarnated personality.

This applies first and foremost to the family structure. For this reason, the relatives or accompanying persons of an individual who is in a soul catharsis (or in the LBP) are completely overwhelmed because they feel how the original fears which he releases during this process are surging high within themselves. The rejection of previous fear-based patterns of behavior by the cathartic personality is perceived by the relatives as a rejection of their personalities that are still driven by these fears. This dissolution process also triggers in them strong fears and aggression. As they are usually younger souls and cannot handle their fears and aggression, they project them onto the person in a soul catharsis: they are worried for his life and at the same time make him fierce reproaches that he had irresponsibly handled and caused this condition with his thoughts and decisions.

In this phase the individual feels, however, that he is being carried by an omnipotent power field that gives him inner certainty in the rightfulness of all the events and provides him with confidence and inner strength that is incomprehensible to his environment. The accompanying persons see only the depressive symptoms of the person in a soul catharsis and try to rationalize these at all costs as to get them under control and thus calm down their own fears. They are under pressure to do something, whatever, and urge the cathartic personality, for example, to visit a psychiatrist and undergo an anti-depressive therapy with grievous consequences, and have no understanding when she rejects their suggestions.

Despite the existential fears that the personality, herself, experiences in this phase, she is purified by an inner fire that allows her unusual ecstatic experiences and gives her the feeling of being enveloped by unknown loving forces which she has not experienced before in her life. Also, during the catharsis, her thoughts become clearer and more penetrating than ever before. She begins to look upon herself and her life in a new, bright light, whereas the familiar everyday reality suddenly seems shabby and inferior.

Humanity has, in general, no experience with a true soul catharsis, even if the term as such was already familiar to the ancient Greeks. The few persons, who might have had in the course of their incarnation cycle such an experience, have not reported it, either because they did not want to break the social taboos that silenced the discussion of such extraordinary experiences, or they considered their soul catharsis under the influence of the environment, indeed as a kind of depressive illness, and were ashamed of that. Also the secret writings of the Occidental and Asian Gnosis do not contain any useful descriptions and interpretations of an individual soul catharsis.

During my spiritual catharsis I spent many days and long hours in a motionless state of seeming mind's absence, staring at the ceiling, while in fact my brain and my consciousness were running full speed. The abstract and existential-realistic visions that my soul sent me at that time, flew by in front of my inner vision in bits and pieces, and I was busy, full-time, classifying, interpreting and internalizing them. I lost my feeling for linear time and lived in a state of Nirvana.

From this quasi-cataleptic state, I emerged transformed and strengthened, with an inner security and deep conviction in the pre-determination of my pathway that I had never known before; it stood in a stark contradiction to my miserable social situation. Since then, and without getting confused, I have had to live with this pronounced dichotomy between the inner pre-determination of my destiny and the perpetual disarray of my everyday life. The overriding task to reconcile these divergent tendencies within my earthly existence became my second nature.

For this same reason, I had to learn to be resistant to all recommendations and well-meant advice that was brought to me, and very often I had to reject it in toto, as inappropriate. My superficial intransigence, whose spiritual source I could not explain to anyone, never sat well with the people I had to deal with.

The majority of young souls hates nothing more intimately than "otherness", especially if it is manifested as an intellectual superiority, at which point they relentlessly try to denote this person with all kinds of pejorative labels, to isolate and punish him socially. Later on, my apparent defiance was interpreted by my surroundings as an expression of my political dissent and this simplified interpretation saved me a lot of unnecessary explanations, as I saw no reason to refute it.

It is one thing to resurrect like a phoenix from the ashes and quite a different one not to forget to fly in the leaden heaviness of dreary everyday life. Soon after my soul catharsis I felt more like a Sisyphus than a free bird. Because outwardly, my predicament had rather deteriorated.

During this time, I learned my most important lesson in life, which as I understood later had to do with my basic fear in this incarnation. Like Jesus, I too have chosen impatience as the basic fear of my current personality and feared for a long time that I would not get an opportunity to fulfill my visions satisfactorily. However, I managed to overcome this form of anxiety with an imperturbable confidence in the future. I had no choice but to be patient and practice blind trust, not to despair and continue educating myself, even if there was no reward and no opportunity of my realization was in sight. My solitary spiritual perfection became the lifeline and sanctuary of my existence, especially because of the superficial unyieldingness and uniqueness of my lifestyle that brought me in constant conflict with the primitive and extreme repressive reality in my home country.

In this way I spent my last years under the communist dictatorship in the inner emigration which became an integral part of my being. After I escaped to the West and my fate turned out for the best, I realized with humility, how important it was that I did not despair and did not lose faith in the future, in the difficult days of my inner emigration from Bulgaria. This insight gave me the necessary inner strength to overcome each hurdle, no matter how difficult, which from then on I considered a welcome temporary challenge.

I realized how important this life attitude was later on in the application of the Universal Law in physics, with the help of which I carried out the unification of this discipline. In the beginning, I seriously doubted my abilities to ever accomplish this task and sought in vain help from external professional physicists. Only after I realized that I had to go my way, as has always been the case in my life – my soul thwarted, very effectively, all my efforts each time I sought help from others – things began to move swiftly forward like a well lubricated machine, and I developed the General Theory of Physics and Mathematics in just a few months. The real breakthrough in physics was accompanied by a number of extraordinary astral experiences which, except for one, will be the topic of another essay.

Indeed, it was as if it was jinxed. As the owner of DIAS Institute (Institute for Drug Investigation, Auditing and Statistics), I made several tenders at the physical faculties in Munich and Garching, where I announced that I was looking for competent and experimental young physicists for novel theoretical research. Several doctor aspirants and also some elderly persons applied because at that time many physicists were unemployed. I offered them a good reimbursement to help me apply the Universal Law for the entire modern theory of physics. I had already carefully worked out the epistemological basics of the Law and had written down the most important physical equations with which I had derived all the fundamental constants of physics from the Universal Equation and had linked them together.

In principle, I had elaborated in a written form the essentials of the new theory as it is presented in Volume I and Volume II and now it was up to these physicists to unify the rest of the physical stuff in a novel design, with the help of this theoretical equipment.

I gave my written papers to all applicants and asked them to read them carefully and then comment on them. To my greatest surprise, none of them was able to grasp the sweeping implications of my discovery or just exhibit a single spark of the excitement which took grip of my mind, psyche and imagination for more than two years, since the first premonition of my tremendous breakthrough in physics overwhelmed me. Since then I had hardly slept due to this excitement. None of the physicists recognized my theoretical breakthrough nor could they even vaguely imagine how one should proceed in the individual physical disciplines, such as classical mechanics, wave theory, thermodynamics, electromagnetism, quantum mechanics and rewrite them according to the Universal Law. My first doubts about the expertise of all physicists started to germinate.

Later on, when I published the two volumes on physics and mathematics and presented the new theory in a number of lectures and gatherings in front of professional audience, these doubts crystallized into certainty: The physicists of today do not master their own discipline because they simply do not understand the nature of All-That-Is, which is also the Primary Term of human consciousness and from which all physical terms, concepts and observables are derived in an axiomatic manner. They are the striking proof for the complete failure of the modern-day educational system in the western world. Subsequently, I tried it with some friends who were nuclear physicists, who had studied in Russia and held important positions in nuclear research in the West, and who I assumed would be competent enough to handle this theoretical challenge. No one recognized the scope of my discovery. Again my efforts were in vain. The physicists did not want to understand it, no matter what I tried.

I must mention here that at that time (spring 1995) I felt a certain discomfort as a medical doctor to have made the biggest discovery in physics of all time, just as experimental physics was about to prove the validity of the quark model in cyclotrons. I was afraid that the physicists would not take me seriously, as it eventually happened, but for completely different reasons (because they are stupid cowards), and searched feverishly for assistance and support from the professionals. I was ready to share my discovery with them because I had clearly recognized its revolutionary impact on the entire field of science, and especially on bio-sciences and medicine, that were at the forefront of my interests at that time as a clinical researcher.

In vain! I had no other choice but to sit down and develop from scratch the new theory of the Universal Law and write it down in three languages, which to my knowledge is already unique in the entire history of science and mankind. This performance was achieved in an amazingly short period of time with the help of the Source, to which I am fully connected since then. I realized that this unimaginable intellectual achievement could only be accomplished by myself and not by the collective effort of uninspired agnostic physicists, as this would have only diluted and diminished the quality of the final intellectual result. The necessary congruence and inner unity of the new theory of the Universal Law could only be achieved by a single, medially inspired human awareness of an incarnated soul such as mine who is massively inspired by the Source.

(N.B. I am the human representative of the Source on earth together with my dual soul Carla who represents the feminine Goddess aspect of the Source and builds in a unified field with me the perfect harmony of masculine and feminine Elohim energies of Creation. When I wrote this essay in 2004 I did not know about her existence as an incarnated soul on earth but only as the feminine mirror image of my Higher Self which is also known as “twin flame” in esoteric circles, although there is much confusion around this term. This is my mission not only as the discoverer of the Universal Law and the author of the Unified Scientific Theory and Gnosis of Science, which is a gift of Godhead to humanity that will replace present-day failed science and all religions, but also as the captain of the Planetary Ascension Team, the PAT, the driving force behind the planetary ascension of Gaia and humanity as this website gives testimony in several thousand articles and actual reports.)

This outstanding performance of pure logic and human will power demonstrates the immense potential and the inherent self-sufficiency of the individual human mind that cannot be subjugated by impersonal state or corporate institutions in order to render similar achievements. This statement is eminently important because it highlights the necessity why the many old souls who are currently incarnated on earth must be liberated from all state and other social constraints which are the product of inferior young soul mentality; the latter torments and inhibits the evolution and creationary abilities of old souls which can only thrive in an intimate dialogue with the higher realms, so that they can make a valuable and significant contribution to the Evolutionary Leap of mankind. These old souls are the germ cells of the new humanity of love and knowledge: they are the pioneers of the new Golden Age.

My pronounced will, which is not of this world and also not meant for the accomplishment of conventional tasks or jobs in the current Orion economy of human enslavement – as I had to experience in a painful way quite often throughout my life – shaped decisively my personality and could not be hidden from my surroundings. Contrary to the usual manifestations of human will that stipulate in the manipulation and exertion of power over others, my will is exclusively dedicated to the clarity and expansion of my thinking and the strict implementation of ethical norms in my actions in a constant defiance to the current debased social norms of behaviour.

This sovereign appearance made me superficially appear as a rebel, or as the Americans used to say: a “trouble maker”. This basic feature of my character was erroneously interpreted by the many young souls, including all Germans and a few Americans with whom I had to deal in this life, as an overly strong ego which they more or less feared and tried in vain to suppress as soon as they were in powerful social or professional positions. In this regard, my life was an eternal “running the gauntlet”, an exhausting fight with the stuffy young soul mentality in today’s society, the meaningfulness of which was hidden to me for a long time until I spiritually fully awakened.

(N.B. Now for the first time the American society is confronted with this dark side of its young unripe soul population when more and more stories of sexual harassment of confident and intelligent women by egomaniac peacock-men in power positions in politics, Hollywood, MSM and big corporations come to light. This behaviour is identical to that I describe above. It is again amazing that I highlighted these despicable offensive habits of the young unripe souls in power positions many years before the agnostic public became aware of it, however, still without knowing or considering the soul age dimension that entirely determines human behaviour and the level of human consciousness.)

Most Americans are, in their vast majority, young immature souls who hate people like me with such an immense inexplicable fervor, because they demonstrate to them moral courage and intellectual steadfastness that they will never muster, and at which they can only marvel, in violent or socially inferior Hollywood action thrillers, as a virtual substitute on the screen. When this civil courage is exceptionally demonstrated by their compatriots in an exemplary manner, they are usually killed as in the case of the Kennedy brothers and Martin Luther King, imprisoned, or socially silenced, as in the case of the few brave writers, artists and filmmakers during the communist witch-hunt in the 50's. Only a few films and books have later dealt with this central American phenomenon of total rejection of individuals with civil courage, however, without being able to formulate a relevant social statement. This fact illuminates the very low social competence of the American society that is routinely overlooked by the rest of the world because the people are blinded by the fake technological progress of the Americans.

(N.B. It is phenomenal with what precision I predicted long time ago the current moral, ethical and intellectual dissolution of the US society. In particular, I explained the real cause of their pathological, irrational and incomprehensible Russia hatred. As I have said on many occasions in this essay and on this website, the Russians are, in their majority, ripe and old souls and this bestows them with a spiritual superiority over the Americans that is so obvious to any unprejudiced observer that it is amazing that not even the best experts can discern it because they are also agnostic. Some Americans and the rest of the world have also recognized in the meantime that the US is no longer the forerunner of technological progress and that their economy has become that of a third world country since the Greatest and Longest Depression began in 2007/2008 when the Wall Street banksters and the Fed deliberately crashed the financial system and the economy as to install the NWO but failed on this uppermost mother planet that evolved to the new original 5D world this year.)

Only in recent years I finally met some old souls, who too had reached the appropriate biological age. They confirmed to me that they have had similar experiences in dealing with young souls. This information was very reassuring for me because it rendered my personal experience a general validity which I then processed in my books and articles.

In the meantime, I have largely completed my analysis on the young soul mentality and know every manifestation of this immature, low-frequency kind of human thought and emotion. Although I comprehend very well the energetic background of this young soul mentality that evolved and expanded in the last two to three thousand years on earth, I cannot say that it has become more attractive to me, quite on the contrary. What is more important, I recognize its temporary nature and why I am chosen to put an end to its escapades in this, my last life on earth, as an incarnated human.

My encounters with young souls have become much rarer in the last years, although still very much unnerving. This is solely due to the energetic incompatibility between my purified astral field and the low-frequency anxiety patterns of the environment. In the society of old souls this phenomenon does not occur at all, quite on the contrary: such interactions with old souls elicit surprising mental synergies that benefit all persons involved.

With this will, strengthened by the adversities of fate, I continued elaborating intellectually on my idea concerning the existence of a world principle of elasticity. These intellectual exercises built during my medical studies, and a few years later, a soothing counterpoint to the stupid theory and practice of medicine and biosciences whose unscientific and provisional character I perceived more clearly with each day. I applied this principle as an aesthetic concept in the literature and tried to imagine which stylistic, ideological and linguistic innovations it would bring about.

I cannot express in the present essay the countless reflections with which I was engaged on this topic and I seriously doubt whether I would be ever in the position to do so. Many stylistic and linguistic innovations that I developed in connection with the principle of elasticity found their way into the Tetralogy of Science and should be a subject of special research for future linguists, regardless of their scientific content. These linguistic investigations should be made on the following factual background.

I have written the new theory of the Universal Law in three languages: Volume I and Volume IV in German, Volume II and its concise version in English, Volume II also in Bulgarian, and Volume III in English. Therefore I had to apply my aesthetic concepts, in terms of content and style, in a different form in each language, in addition to the different sciences and terminology I dealt with. The advantage of mastering multiple languages and scientific terminology from different sciences and liberal arts, as I did for instance with respect to physics, medicine, bio-sciences, philosophy, theology, Gnosis and esotericism, is that the words and the expressions which one uses are no longer taken for granted, as is the case with most native speakers, but are consciously and deliberately used according to their structure, semantics and connotation. In this way I gained a novel approach to language, which also opens new possibilities of expression for me.

I learned English and German at an age when my language and writing style in Bulgarian was already very much advanced due to extensive lectures and literary experiments. This circumstance allowed me to approach foreign languages in a creative manner and not take them for granted as my mother tongue. Conversely, I increasingly gained distance to the Bulgarian language and could reinvent it in many new ways. Thus I was able to identify the weaknesses and benefits of the different languages and to apply them creatively according to my aesthetic, scientific and other needs.

As far as English is concerned, it has no proper word for “axiomatics” (N.B. This applies to all English encyclopaedia published as books at that time, 2004. In the last years one can find English definitions of “axiomatics” or “axiomatic system” on the Internet under the influence of other European languages where this word is very common and important for science). This term is completely unknown to all English-speaking people, not just as a word, but first and foremost as a concept of human thinking. That is why most Americans and English people are unable to think in a logically structured manner and cannot resolve problems consistently and holistically. Since the scientists are empirical through and through, they have no clue what to do with such a foreign concept as axiomatics. This shortcoming is a salient feature of most English-language books, textbooks and public discussions, and explains why these nations do not possess the intellectual potential to understand the new theory of the Universal Law, and will need a lot of primary education on my part as an ascended master. This deficit goes back to the notoriously bad or no education of Latin, in these countries.

That is why it was a big challenge for me to write down the new Integrated Physical and Mathematical Axiomatics of the Universal Law in Volume II in English, while eliminating all the inherent logical disadvantages of this intrinsically illogical language. Contrary to that is Bulgarian, German and all Slavonic languages, all well-equipped for the proper presentation of the new axiomatics, because this concept has a long-standing tradition in science in these countries that goes back to Euclid’s geometry, and the German and Russian schools of mathematics.

Because of these cultural linguistic deficits, the Anglo-Saxon world is having a hard time with the new theory of the Universal Law. It has no tradition in logical-axiomatic thinking. Add to that the inevitable fact that all current and past conceptions of these young soul nations in politics, morality and economics, which have currently gained a (notorious) validity worldwide, will be eliminated in one fell swoop as fallacious, when the new theory of the Universal Law will be introduced very soon according to the divine plan for this planet.

Herewith I would like to emphasize explicitly only one central stylistic and content specification of my writings: I decided never to use any superfluous words in order to embellish my sentences and never to lose the red thread of my thoughts during a treatise. Thanks to my “Inner Voice of Truth”, I realized very early that the authors of all philosophical and scientific works that I had read so far had lost, without any exception, the red thread on numerous occasions and had introduced many contradictory statements and ideas without being aware of this deplorable fact, because they knew nothing of the laws of axiomatic, logical thinking.

(N.B. I have analysed these deficiencies in Western abstract thinking in my later book on philosophy “Descartes, Spinoza, Leibniz, Kant – Philosophic Sources as Background to the New Pantheory and Gnosis of the Universal Law” (2007) in great depth and detail from the position of the new Axiomatics. I have proved beyond any doubt, why and how these renowned thinkers of the Old Continent have totally failed to establish truthful categorical systems that reflect correctly the nature of All-That-Is, as they pretend to have done in their introductions and as this is surmised by all professors in philosophy at European universities. This is the mortal verdict of the entire modern Western philosophy that leaves Neoplatonism as the only truthful gnostic teaching in the Occidental tradition before the discovery of the Universal Law.)

This finding made me suspicious and very thoughtful from the very beginning of my intellectual journey. At that early point in time, I, however, could not foresee that with this aesthetic principle I had already laid the conceptual foundation of the new Physical and Mathematical Axiomatics. In this way, the a priori idea of the existence of only one “Universal Law of Nature” took shape slowly but surely in my mind and was enriched over time with both intellectual and psychological knowledge, and with numerous experiences on the spiritual-energetic level, as reported in this spiritual autobiography.

I defined already at that time my unconditional and systematic following of the red thread of my thoughts, that later matured to an all-encompassing Axiomatics of all human scientific knowledge “the Logos of Thought“. This aesthetic concept takes into account not only the inner logic and the free flow of my thoughts, but at the same time the inner-soul force field that I always perceive during writing. I had experimented with this technique first in poetry during my dissident years in Bulgaria and later on applied it to all my writings.

Only in retrospect I realize that this kind of writing is inspired by my soul in an expanded, extremely creative psycho-mental state, in which my thoughts spurt spontaneously out of my Higher Self without violating the formal logic of my mind and at the same time render the written word a powerful soul force and transcendental dynamics that uninspired texts never possess.

The technique is very simple – when I am ready to write, I sit in front of a blank sheet of paper (since 1985 the computer screen has replaced the blank sheet) and imagine how I delve into the depth of my consciousness. Although I had for a long time no idea about meditation and rejected this practice, my writing method is actually a simple and very effective form of creative meditation, probably applied by many writers with more or less success. After a while, out of nowhere thoughts begin to pop up which I put in a verse form at the beginning of this exercise and then had to re-write them several times until my aesthetic feeling was fully satisfied. Even today, when I write scientific or other texts I apply this same method and leave my thoughts to run wild. In this state of heightened inspiration my thoughts flow so fast that I can barely keep up pace with typing them. I often type up to ten pages per hour.

Afterwards I have to re-write every sentence several times, whereby I continue to use the same method until I am fully satisfied with the final form. The numerous corrections always result in a simplification and bundling of the style. They must meet my rigorous criteria in terms of content and emotional power, which I draw exclusively from the “inner voice of truth”. I have never prepared a draft or an expose of a book in advance. Before I start, I usually have no concrete idea how voluminous the text would be or which shape it would take. I am reluctant to write in prefabricated formats since I began to hate the obscure editorial rules of the various journals regarding the format of presentation of scientific publications, which I have been writing for many years as a clinical researcher. In the course of the writing that flows through me as though through a funnel, the text almost involuntarily takes the desired shape and structure, which then fulfills the strictest didactic requirements.

Although the following insight is included in many channeled texts, I would like to take the opportunity again and discuss it one more time here: every text resonates with an invisible higher dimensional vibration that lends the words, beyond their mere connotation, an inner, transcendental power of persuasion and meaning. This vibration is not between the written lines as one might surmise. Rather, a specific astral-telepathic resonance is established between the message that a written text conveys during reading and the mind of the reader, which consists of higher dimensional spiritual energies and cannot be found in the human brain, much to the chagrin of all neurologists who search in vain for it in the cortex. When a text harbours extremely high frequency patterns, as is the case with all my books and articles, then it happens quite often that the written message cannot reach the mind of the reader and disappears into the “black holes” of his imperfect lower vibrating memory. I remind the reader in this context of the fact that the human mind operates only as a memory that can be easily modulated by the soul.

I make the experience that many readers who read my books would tell me afterwards that they are fascinated by the content while reading it, but as soon as they close my book they cannot remember anything and are unable to reproduce the content or the meaning of it. In such a case, the mind of the reader gets no active support from his soul. Given the high-frequency vibrations of the General Theory of Science of the Universal Law and its numerous applications, the human brain cannot maintain these vibrations on its own and the person cannot store the content and its deeper meaning in his memory. This mental deficit occurs mainly in young, unripe souls and is a major obstacle for the proper understanding and dissemination of the new Scientific Theory and Gnosis of the Universal Law on a global scale.

(N.B. Human memory is actively supported and managed by the soul as it operates as an electromagnetic organ that stores all information. The human mind and the ego can only make a limited use of this stored information in the mental field of the incarnated personality depending on how high or low they vibrate. If the personality is fear-based and low vibrating, her access to the memory will be limited to low-vibrating thoughts and patterns and she will effectively forget most things, as is the case with dementia patients who are in their vast majority unripe young, child or baby souls as previously discussed. The less fears the individual has and the higher the vibrations of his body-mind-spirit system are, the better his memory will function. This is also due to the fact that such persons have developed an expanded holistic awareness which encompasses all the facts and information in a logical, structured manner that is synchronized with the harmony of All-That-Is, and is much easier to store and reproduce. Essentially this is the objective of this essay – to show how the individual can raise his frequencies and expand his awareness to encompass the transcendental dimension by training his mind and intelligence to operate in a coherent manner throughout his whole life. Energetic coherence of body, mind, psyche and spirit is the only pathway to individual ascension as the energies in the higher realms are entirely coherent.)

I had the same experience with the high frequencies of a few channelled texts when I first started reading this kind of literature in the 90's. As the stuff presented in these texts was still relatively new to me, at the beginning I was able to keep only a few fragments in my mind and then slowly internalize them, although I was already quite advanced in my mediality. I had to contemplate and rethink the content of such texts for a long time, then review the statements empirically and read them several more times. I noticed that over time I could better understand the hidden message behind the lines, until it became so familiar to me, as if I had written it myself. However, I had to discard many channelled messages as incorrect and fear-tainted. In such cases I rely on the judgment of my Soul which always manifests as the “inner voice of truth”.

How many channellers and readers actually bother to make this intellectual effort? I do not know many in the esoteric scene. If such authors make an exception and deal with their channeled messages in an intensive intellectual way as is the case with the German team Varda Hasselmann as a medium, and Frank Schmolke as a questioner, one still remains stuck in the given idiom and makes no effort mainly due to spiritual high-esteem (which is a popular basic fear among light workers) to analyze other channelled texts and include them in his/her reflections. It is even less unlikely that they would check for contradictions in their own channelled texts, some of which are intentionally introduced by the source as to test the logical faculty of the channeller and the reader.

In other words, I miss, in modern esoteric literature, which has, due to the better education of the mediums, a much higher quality than the old hackneyed “holy” scriptures, the scientific attitude and the overview on all the relevant gnostic sources, as I have done it in recent years in a profound manner. Right now every New Ager is cooking his own soup and does not care about a clean analysis and synthesis of his channelled messages, which compliment and present a complete picture of the Evolutionary Leap of humanity and include important clues about the current situation in the End Time.

(N.B. I wrote these lines in 2004 when the New Age literature was still in its infancy, although there were a few good channellers from the 90's and some even from the 80's, not to forget Seth's books channelled by Jane Roberts in the 70's that are still a highlight in modern esoteric literature. For that reason, I deliberately stopped using the Internet under the guidance of my soul for 10 years – from 2000 to 2010 – as not to contaminate my thoughts with New Age trash and be able to write my five gnostic books in direct and clear communication with the Source. Only after that my soul urged me to use the Internet again and eventually open this website in 2011.

I was the first to introduce the following major concepts and ideas regarding the End Time with the publication of my English book on Gnosis “The Cosmic Laws of Creation and Destruction” which was written in 2010 and published on the Internet in early 2011. It triggered furore in the New Age scene and awakened some of them from their “sleeping beauty” dream. Please observe that the anticipated economic collapse for 2011 in this book happened full force on numerous lower timelines which we began to sever after we opened the 11.11.11 stargate. The financial and economic collapse happened also on our higher timelines as we witnessed and discussed it in real time on this website, but it was also mitigated by us, by our light, based on our knowledge that it would happen. This is how we create new timelines and realities in each moment in the Now by avoiding an undesired probability alternative. This disquisition on personal Gnosis elucidates in depth this form of multidimensional Creation with respect to the peaceful ending of the Cold war and the fall of the Iron Curtain.

These novel concepts were either completely unknown to the New Agers or if they had heard of them, they did not bother to fully understand them and to seriously consider their consequences for their personal lives and the destiny of humanity. Here are the major new gnostic ideas of the current End Time that I first introduced on a global scale which were then picked up or coarsely plagiarized by other esoteric writers:

1) The real existence of a planetary ascension process that will transcend Gaia and part of humanity to the 5D and higher dimensions in the current End Time; for this reason, the New Age movement was created by the higher realms in the first place.

2) The existence of the light body process, LBP as a vehicle of individual ascension in this lifetime which some advanced souls undergo in full force before the rest of humanity and build the Planetary Ascension Team that effectively ascends Gaia and part of the incarnated human souls. This website is also the website of the PAT.

3) The existence of multiple timelines and earths that have to be severed in an interdimensional shift (ID shift) and eventually destroyed by magnetic pole reversal and/or man-made nuclear or other global catastrophe so that any forecast made on this website has happened on numerous lower timelines while we have constantly bilocated to higher timelines, taking the entire humanity with us. The key knowledge behind this concept is that creation occurs only in the Now and all events should be regarded as if they would happen in this very moment.

4) The key gnostic knowledge that linear time and 3D-space-time is an illusion of the human senses and created by them. This is the epistemological foundation of the new theory of the Universal Law.

...and many more pivotal gnostic ideas which can be read on this website.

The connection between planetary ascension and individual ascension as LBP was slowly accepted by most light workers only in the last few years. Before we, the PAT, opened the 11.11.11 and 11.21.11 stargates and firmly anchored the ascension process on this planet, this concept was virtually unknown to most light workers and this generated a lot of discussions and critics of myself on the Internet when the New Agers were first confronted with this idea. Some of these discussions and unreflected criticism can be also found on this website which has always been an open forum for broad discussions that cover the whole spectrum of human thought.

The concept of multidimensionality of all creation, which I also introduced for the first time after 11.11.11 and since then expanded with numerous facets, personal experiences and theoretical elaborations has not been fully understood by most New Agers, up to the present moment. The idea that linear time and 3D-space-time are an illusion of the human senses that create this holographic model in the first place, while all creation exists in the Now, is not at all understood by all New Agers outside the readers of this website. The reason for that is that they had not taken notice of the existence of the new Theory of the Universal Law, as they avoid any intellectual effort and true science.

There is not a single esoteric author worldwide who is able to connect all these transcendental phenomena and knowledge, even if he is aware of them, with the ongoing social changes that happen with humanity in the economy, finance, politics as I have done extensively on this website, and explained them from a transcendental point of view. The reason for that is the ubiquitous rejection of the intellectual mind by most New Agers who are afraid of their own thoughts and intellectuality, and have thus caused their own descent into spiritual laziness that ultimately hinders their true evolution. I have discussed the Ten Major Reasons Why the New Age Movement Has Declared Intellectual and Moral Bankruptcy in a comprehensive essay.

These comments underline why this essay, dedicated to the acquisition of human gnostic knowledge as a personal experience, is of such great importance. It illuminates all the mental and intellectual deficits of the few slowly ascending light workers and the rest of the agnostic human population that is eventually scheduled to ascend in the distant future, and what huge educational work lies ahead of us.)

In my literary conception, the “world principle of elasticity” was considered to be an integral part of all human actions that were depicted in works of art, as they were imbedded in the historical perspective and determined their outcome in a natural and spontaneous manner. I imagined it as a kind of an invisible existential glue that was holding all earthly matters together and rendered them inner logic and a deeper spiritual meaning. In this way, I wanted to overcome the obvious fragmentation of any literary Weltanschauung that has always disturbed me, and lift it up to a new level of universal human perception.

In a comprehensive aesthetic sense, I aspired a full synthesis between the scientific world view of the 20th century and the diverse, contradictory representations of the emotional world in Western prose and poetry. A sound and universal education in Science should support me in this project. In this respect, I chose Robert Musil, the Austrian author of one of the most influential novels of modern time “The Man Without Features/ Traits/ Characteristics” (Mann Ohne Eigenschaften) as a role model (The usual English translation of the title of this novel as “The Man Without Qualities” is wrong and confusing). It is superfluous to mention at this place that this literary ambition was never realized because it did not belong to my actual tasks and mission.

I was not meant to innovate literature and arts on the basis of an aesthetic principle, but to reinvent science which I intended to use as an instrument for that purpose. Only today I recognize, with a smile, the cosmic joke behind all my intellectual efforts that were accompanied by deliberate misdirections and illuminations. As I could not realize my aesthetic intention, from then on it lived as a literary conception in my consciousness. Much later this novel aesthetic perspective, which I had carried in my mind over many years and enriched with numerous details, decisively fertilized my observations and analyses of the diverse social and psycho-mental characteristics of the young soul mentality, including the agony of old souls to bear this, and contributed essentially to the development of the new Gnosis.

I perceived the astral-energetic conditioning behind the phenomenology of all human existence and recognized with inner satisfaction that most works of world literature and arts are woven with this tragicomic fabric. I came to the following important conclusion:

The Universal Law is not only the natural law of the physical world, but it also determines the mode of action of the human psyche and the mind. For this reason, the Universal Law, when applied as the “aesthetic principle of psychic elasticity”, is without exception the most adequate literary and artistic presentation of human behavior. It is the universal creative principle with the help of which humanity will drive forward the renewal of art and literature in the third millennium.

Even such absurd teachings as the psychoanalysis of Freud is based on the intuitive perception of the Universal Law as a dynamic law of energy conversion. I have succinctly presented this fundamental property of space-time in the “axiom for the reciprocal behavior of two adjacent energy gradients of a system” (N.B. read also this article). This operational statement is basic to the definition of many conventional laws and is also suitable for the presentation of psychic dynamics.

Freud has surmised the extreme dynamics between soul, psyche and mind but his description of the energetic interactions between the “Es (subconscious)”, “Ich (I, Ego)” and “„Über-Ich (super ego, has nothing to do with the Higher Self, but with the social conditioning and impregnation of the ego)” is full of obscure metaphysical concepts that are then abundantly garnished with literary aperçus. Nevertheless, Freud’s psychoanalysis opened the floodgates for the renewal of the dusty and contrived 18th and 19th century literature and arts in England and Europe. Neither “the stream of consciousness“, nor such books as “Lady Chatterley’s Lover” by D.H. Lawrence would have ever been realized without the Freudian psychoanalysis. This example illustrates the intrinsic ability of literature and arts to be immensely inspired by extremely wrong and pseudo-scientific teachings and to produce alleged masterpieces as can be seen in all avant-garde movements and their pseudo-scientific theoretical programs (see above). How much more inspiration and creative power will the Universal Law bring about in literature and arts when it is properly comprehended and internalized by all artists?

For me, literature is a key means of expansion and enrichment of my limited personal experience. I consider the reading of a significant literary work as an intimate and extensive dialogue with the author, which is incomparably more satisfying than any “profound” conversation with a friend or acquaintance. A literary masterpiece reflects the concentrated life experience and wisdom of the author, whereas every conversation in the current time inevitably deteriorates to unreflected platitudes and short-sighted anxiety-laden views, as can be observed in private life and excessively on TV. That is why the quality of the existential wisdom that one gets from literature is far superior to that which one gets only from his personal experience or in conversations with other people.

I therefore express the view that a meaningful, conscious individual experience is possible, when, and only when, it takes place on the background of an extensive literary education that expands immeasurably the subjective interpretation of the individual experience and lends it a universal objectivity. This educational aspect was well recognized in the Age of Enlightenment but has completely disappeared in today’s world of flattened views based on disconnected optical impressions. Therefore, the quality of insights which one gains today from conversations, even with professionals in the media, have sank a long time ago below the officially recognized degree of oligophrenia in medicine. The typical feature of young incarnated soul is to talk a lot and have an opinion on every topic without bothering to think about it. Their motto is: talking is Trump, thinking is difficult. I have tackled this central topic of human cognition in my essay on the mentality of the American young souls which I wrote shortly after 9/11 titled: “Subjectivity and Objectivity of Human Perception”

The “aesthetic principle of elasticity” did not remain a mere abstract idea of my mind, but took concrete literary form in my thoughts. In times of leisure, I designed a plot for a key novel. I have never seriously considered the realization of this literary work, yet its plot and the underlying idea proved in retrospect to be remarkably prophetic: it anticipated the discovery of the Universal Law exactly ten years in advance, at a time when I had no clue what my soul had in store for me. I will, therefore, present a brief synopsis of my literary project below.

Synopsis of My Unwritten Novel on the Principle of Elasticity

The main protagonist in this novel is a young man who lives in an unidentified communist country in the 70's and becomes a political dissident. He is arrested and, as was customary at that time, confined in a special closed psychiatric institution. There he is under the medical observation of an old psychiatrist. This doctor studied psychoanalysis before World War II, in Vienna, and is regarded by the communist authorities as an incorrigible bourgeois, who was professionally degraded and sent to this institution, where he was tolerated only because of his excellent expertise.

This seasoned psychiatrist has little to do in a lunatic asylum, in which most patients are not mentally ill, but political prisoners declared by the system to be crazy and thus eliminated from the society as a political opposition. Thus, he spends his time dealing with the inmates and talking with them about all sorts of topics; he lets his Slavic soul dangle and is very satisfied with his life, void of all ambitions. He regards it as an irony of Destiny, that he was punished because of his bourgeois class descent in a way that allowed him to live among like-minded people and officially enjoy social contacts for which one can only envy him under communism. He has long given up, to make a difference between himself and the imprisoned dissidents because he knows that his job as a psychiatrist merely serves as a facade to hide the actual fact that this institution is a prison for political dissidents.

The reason for this camouflage is the Helsinki Accords, which were ratified by all Easteuropean communist governments that committed themselves to no longer imprison political dissidents or detain them in labor camps. Instead, they are now defamed as “mentally ill” and locked up in closed psychiatric wards. In this way, they are eliminated from the political stage and can no longer serve as an alibi for the West to denounce the Communist dictatorship in Eastern Europe.

The management is absolutely aware of the actual function of this institution and has only one thought in their minds: like most people in this last phase of the communist system, they only want to enjoy an easy and conflict-free life. The management leaves both the patients and our old psychiatrist on their own, as long as they do not break the only relevant rule, namely, not to cause trouble and not attract the attention of the higher authorities. This attitude requires no special sacrifice from the inmates, since, in this lunatic asylum, they enjoy a spiritual freedom of which they can only dream outside.

For the same reason, our bourgeois psychiatrist enjoys the absolute freedom of a jester in the exercise of his medical obligations. He spends his working day in a pleasant way, in lengthy outspoken conversations with his political patients and declares these conversations outwardly as special psychiatric treatment. Everyone is aware of this tacit scam, and this schizophrenic behavior of all persons involved characterizes this institution as a veritable madhouse.

In this way the old psychiatrist meets our young man and has several lengthy discussions with him. In contrast to the other inmates, the young man has no interest in participating in the usual political discussions, which essentially revolve around the question as to when and how the West will defeat the East. Rather, he is obsessed with a fixed idea concerning the existence of an overarching social forcefield which he claims to have discovered through observations and pure introspection. With it he claims to be able to predict and explain the collapse of the communist system in a dialectical manner.

He also sustains that this power is at work in all historical epochs and that he is about to prove that statement with historical examples. He states that he has developed a mental method with which he can attune to the collective memory of humanity. In this way, he could experience the actual historical atmosphere that has led to great social upheavals, for example, to the downfall of the Byzantine Empire or the outbreak of the French Revolution. This discovery contradicts, in his opinion, the dialectical materialism of Marx and Engels with which the inevitable historical evolution of humanity from slavery to feudalism, capitalism and finally culminating into communism is officially justified in the Marxist doctrine. With that he could prove the inevitability of the collapse of communism.

In the beginning, the old psychiatrist believes that in this case he actually has to deal with a mentally ill guy, but he lets the young man continue talking with his usual laziness and permissiveness, and listens to him carefully, without treating him with any psychotropic drugs as the management would expect from him. The longer he listens to the young man, the more fascinated he is with his idea.

One day, the doctor decides to revive his old knowledge of Freudian psychoanalysis and Jungian archetype teaching, and especially the technique of deep hypnosis which he mastered very well as a psychiatrist before the war, but has not exercised for many years after the communists came to power. He discusses his intention with the young man who gives his consent to this experiment. After some failed initial attempts, the old psychiatrist manages to put the young man in a trance state and begins to interrogate him.

During the first several sessions, the young man responds in a well-behaved manner to the questions of the psychiatrist, however, without being able to establish connection to his daring social theory, so that the psychiatrist is rather disappointed with the result and considers stopping the experiment. Then, all of a sudden, the young man begins to speak clearly, while in a trance, what he is actually experiencing and puts his experiences in a larger historical framework. In each session, he is in a different historical epoch, and is either witnessing the events as an observer or is a direct protagonist.

Sometimes he is a defender on the walls of Constantinople and fights against the Turk hordes. He reports on the strategic errors which the Emperor Constantine committed in defending the capital on the Bosphorus that led to its conquest. His knowledge is astonishingly precise and detailed. It captures complex relationships of which official history knows nothing.

Another time he lives in Rome and reports on the infighting between consuls, generals, patricians and plebeians in the Senate and behind the scenes. He complements his historical reports with quotations from Roman writers and historians and points to inaccuracies in their writings.

Then he is a contemporary of Paul and reports on the gnostic discussions in the first Christian communities in Thessalonike and Philippi. He corrects important statements in the Bible, which he exposes as later forgeries and clarifies the political background and living conditions of the first Christians.

Later on, he is a participant in the French Revolution and describes very well the psychological transformation of well-known revolutionaries, who turned from enthusiastic idealists and altruists to cynical fanatics and hangmen.

The old psychiatrist writes meticulously all conversations during the trance sessions and is increasingly obsessed by these dialogues. The meetups take place daily and the records of all these conversations soon reach a considerable volume. The doctor recognizes the real possibility, to penetrate for the first time, hidden areas of collective human knowledge. Each day after a trance session, he discusses his notes with the young man, who can remember some of the things he has said in trance. Together they set the next historical itinerary in the realms of collective spirit and use extensively historical reference works, which the old psychiatrist has provided so that they can prepare themselves theoretically for the next trance journey in past human history. The two lead extensive discussions and often wander into philosophical disquisitions that give the reader a novel insight into occidental philosophy.

While at the beginning, their conversations during the hypnosis sessions revolve around relevant historical events, with time they leave more and more the ground of bare reporting of controversial or unknown facts and become more and more philosophical and abstract. The old psychiatrist gets the impression that many experiences, about which the young man reports in a trance, are experienced by himself, though his insights about other historical events seem to come from an alien source. He is inclined, to reconsider the doctrine of reincarnation of secret and esoteric schools, with which he had a lot to do in the past with respect to psychoanalysis, as a working hypothesis, although he himself doubts the reincarnation of the soul.

In order to test his hypothesis closely, the old psychiatrist interrogates the young man one day as he resides during a hypnosis session, in Germany during the Middle Ages, in German language, and he also answers in German, although he does not speak this language. The young man quotes old German poets and writers known only to specialists and who are not translated in the language of this Eastern Bloc country. Further, he speaks in a trance Russian, English, Italian or French, depending in which country he is historically located during his trance session. If he is, for example, a Russian nobleman at the time of the Napoleonic wars, he speaks either Russian or French with Russian accent, though he can speak French perfectly as soon as he lives in France, as a native speaker in another historical epoch.

These are all languages which the old psychiatrist has learned to speak during his extended sojourn in Western Europe before WW2 and he now benefits from this knowledge in his spiritual experiment on the true history of the Old Continent. When asked by the old doctor, the young man answers even in ancient Greek and Latin. However, he does not know other marginal European languages so that the doctor concludes that the young man has not lived in his previous incarnations in these countries.

When asked how come that under hypnosis the young man can master so many languages, while when he is awake he has no memory of them anymore, a transpersonal source enters the conversation during a trance session, and tells the psychiatrist that each incarnated person has a cell memory of his previous incarnations and is thus capable of speaking all the languages of these incarnations in a state of expanded awareness. The source refers to the Pentecost miracle, when the disciples of Jesus were filled with the Holy Spirit and could converse in different old languages at the same time, while the other people around them could not understand them and thought they were drunk (“And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.” (Acts 2: 2-4). This message leads to profound discussions over several sessions with this source, which presents itself as the “Higher Self” of the young man; they handle various esoteric and gnostic topics.

The focus of the doctor’s interest is centered around the psychological background of human Beingness. The old psychiatrist is a good connoisseur of the esoteric writings of Peter Danov (see above), whom he knew personally before the war. He is a witness of an unheard expansion of consciousness, which is without precedent in modern psychiatry. The sessions are already taking place for more than a year and the psychiatrist involves the young man conscientiously in all his theoretical reflections; they work as a team on this scientific project that they keep secret from the other inmates and the asylum administration.

This whole year, the doctor neglects his daily duties and devotes himself fervently to his hypnosis research. For the first time, he feels inspired by a real thirst for scientific research, which he has not felt since his youth. The young man also changes visibly during this time. His personality is rapidly maturing before the astonished eyes of the old psychiatrist – he becomes more silent and thoughtful. His youthful spontaneity and enthusiasm are replaced by an inexplicable sadness and yearning. Notwithstanding all that, he still sticks to his original idea. Either in a conscious state or in a trance, he is always engaged with the existence of an omnipotent forcefield of social transformation, which he now plans to attribute the rank of a natural principle.

The psychiatrist feels increasingly overwhelmed by the intellectual objectives of his study object, which threaten to blow up his field of psychiatric activity. He, himself, is very satisfied with his scientific achievements so far and forges plans as to how he can expand his newly acquired knowledge into a new theory of the human Psyche. The disillusioned old man has never reckoned before with such a demanding intellectual task. It gives a new meaning to his life and bestows him with inner strength.

In contrast, the young man begins to doubt the meaning of the hypnosis sessions and wants instead to explore his idea with the help of rationally founded scientific methods. It comes to an estrangement between the two. The young man is less and less tolerant towards the influence of his mentor and questions his scientific approach. One day, the hypnosis does not succeed and the sessions come to an end. The young man distances himself from the psychiatrist and falls into disrepair and a moderate form of autism. The old psychiatrist feels responsible for him and certifies him endogenous schizophrenia. He presents the case in front of the responsible medical commission and the patient is recognized as mentally ill. Paradoxically, the young man is released from the lunatic asylum with the official certification of his alleged mental illness, because from then on he no longer poses a political threat in the eyes of the communist authorities.

In the meantime, the old psychiatrist establishes contact to an old Austrian colleague with whom he was a close friend in his student days. The latter is considered to be a luminary of psychoanalysis, works as the head of an important institute for psychiatry in Vienna and holds a professorship in the USA. The old psychiatrist informs him about the young man and his scientific research, and asks him for support. The Austrian colleague is very interested in the case, and meets his old friend for the first time after the Second World War in his homeland, on the occasion of an international symposium on psychiatry, that takes place for the first time in this Easteuropean country.

The old psychiatrist is deeply touched and organizes a meeting between his guest and the young man. He asks the Austrian to assert his influence and invites the young man as a patient in the West, in order to continue his research under more favorable conditions. The opportunity to overcome the Iron Curtain exists for some time and is, in fact, a tacit deportation of political dissidents in the West. The old psychiatrist presents all his preliminary results from the hypnosis sessions with the young man. He gives the files to his famous colleague and even waives authorship. The Austrian psychiatrist promises to do everything in his power. He knows a high-ranking party official in this Eastern bloc country, who is himself a doctor and a psychiatrist, and is responsible in the politburo for science.

A few months later, the Austrian professor actually succeeds in getting an exit permit for the young man and he travels to Vienna to be treated for his alleged schizophrenia. When he arrives in Vienna, he undergoes various investigations. The hypnosis sessions fail however the way they were done by the old psychiatrist, so that the Austrian professor soon loses interest in this case. He also shows no understanding for the underlying transcendental idea behind this kind of expansion of human consciousness.

The young man travels to Munich and applies for political asylum in Germany. He starts with his studies of philosophy and economics there, hoping to be able to elaborate theoretically on its original vision of a powerful natural forcefield behind human history and social order, and to justify it scientifically.

The novel comes to an end when the young man retires from academic life as he is deeply disappointed by the narrow mindset at German universities, and the mental limitations of his fellow students and professors, and cannot stand them anymore. At this time he learns that the old psychiatrist has died in his homeland. He establishes contact to the Austrian professor and asks him for the whereabouts of the scientific documents of his compatriot. He learns that the documents were considered scientifically unfit and were destroyed. Thus, there is no written documentation on the joint hypnosis sessions, which had opened the unique possibility of a conscious access to the collective memory of humanity. It looks as though these sessions had not occurred at all.

Instead of sadness, this loss triggers an inexplicable relief in the young man. He realizes that from now on, he will be alone, confronted with the immensely difficult task to prove that life is not made up of individual, random, incoherent events, but that the whole existence is directed by a spiritual forcefield that has, so far, not been interpreted correctly, either by the religions or by all past philosophers. This invisible power shapes, in a powerful manner, the history of humanity, where the individual destinies are acted out. Nevertheless, man possesses, by virtue of his free Spirit, the possibility to overcome social and material determination of his current existence, and to penetrate into unimaginable areas of transcendental experiences. The book ends with this confidence which the young man expresses in an emphatic philosophical monologue, that also represents a review of his past experience in an expanded state of awareness.

I designed the plot of this novel at the beginning of the 80's and played with it in my spirit for a long time while changing it many times. The idea was vaguely born thirteen years before, and acquired a distinct form ten years before the actual discovery of the Universal Law in 1994 – 1995, at a time when I could not even dream of this scientific breakthrough. I have drafted such future visions of my Self very often in this life and considered them to be irrelevant gimmicks of my imagination. In fact, they were soul-inspired probability alternatives of my future mission which I had to process in a neutral literary and sometimes, encrypted way.

Without being worried, these exercises prepared the spiritual ground for my future discovery, and the subsequent feverish scientific activity with which I broke through the limits of human knowledge. I did this in a way that was thought to be impossible before, and could profoundly transform the scientific world view. If I would have looked at this unvarnished truth already at that time, when my personality was not sufficiently consolidated, I would have been hopelessly overwhelmed. Without a certain degree of gnostic ignorance and delusion, which my soul deliberately exploited depending on the actual state of my spiritual evolution, I would not have collected all the necessary experiences that made this scientific breakthrough possible.

The incarnation life is a game of hide-and-seek with the soul, or rather, with Spirit. When the soul incarnates on the earth, she takes full responsibility for her amnesia. This is important insofar as the reduction of amnesia during the LBP has the precondition that the incarnated personality intellectually acknowledges this responsibility and appropriates the point of view of the soul. The soul is always aware of the circumstances of her incarnation.

Human incarnation life is thus a game of hide-and-seek, in which the mind as “Pure Reason” (Kant) must discover the soul or the higher Self and identify with them. For this reason, in the course of each earthly life, several key signs and markers are encoded in the subconscious mind of the personality. They trigger important cognitive processes in the incarnated personality as soon as they occur. These signs and markers can be key experiences with other soul mates, as was often the case with me, or there may be other external events, such as natural disasters, that lift the veil of forgetfulness a little bit each time, and promote the mediality of the personality. Sometimes the personality overlooks these signs. In this case, new signs and markers are installed in the human subconscious, so that the predetermined path is taken in any case – in this or another incarnation. In this regard, the universe is extremely flexible and malleable.

Such signs and inspirations prepared my psyche and my mind in a non-committal, abstract intellectual way for my future transpersonal task. In this regard, the literary level offers the ideal environment in which emotional and intellectual tendencies of the incarnated personality meet informally in order to unfold beyond the scope of the individual destiny.

As Robert Musil has very well expressed in his novel, one inevitably changes to a “Man Without Features” – not in the sense that one has no more any personal traits and characteristics, but that one acquires such a high level of spiritual flexibility that allows him to identify with so many other human traits, qualities, destinies and phenomena which life presents, that the limited conception of one’s own identity, as a singular human character, is trans-personalised. The individual characteristics are expanded and merge forever with the diversity of human Beingness. Any return to previous limited lifestyle is no longer possible.

Thus, literature is not just a source of knowledge beyond one’s own experience, but above all an important playground of creativity. The creative skills that I acquired in this area helped me decisively to discover the Universal Law and develop the new scientific Gnosis. It is hard for me to separate my scientific achievements from the literary ones, let alone give a preference to one of them.

Above all, literature is the playground for human Imagination. This extraordinary property of the creative Spirit is in turn an expression of the indwelling ability of the incarnated personality to deal with astral probability alternatives. She can bring them to fruition as abstract platonic ideas of pure reason and can continually weigh the degree of their realisation in 3D space-time, so that they can be enriched with real existential content. In this way, the “visible world of the transitory 3D forms” emerges from the “invisible world of the timeless ideas”, as Plotin writes in depth in his Enneads.

The role of human imagination is underrated in today's pseudo-rational, bustling modern age. It is blemished with unworldliness and lack of seriousness. In reality, human imagination is the most precious "gift of God". It is the true source of the much quoted free will in philosophy and esoteric literature.

From an astral-energetic point of view, the free will expresses man's opportunity to choose a particular alternative from several, potentially existing alternatives, and then realize it. But this choice is then, and only then, possible, if one playfully envisions in his thoughts all the other available alternatives and compares their possible outcome. This abstract performance of the human mind is called "imagination". In this process, complex comparisons with similar situations in the past that are available to the mind as memory, can be accessed anytime and play a crucial role. These comparisons were made possible only after the souls introduced the so-called "reflection pause" in the human mental processing of the environment.

The reflection pause, which has not yet been discovered by the neuro-physiologists, represents a qualitatively new stage in the development of the human mind and has initiated its accelerated evolution in the last ten – twenty thousand years. This mental function was purposefully introduced by the 7F-creationary realms as to foster the free will of the incarnated human personality. In this way, the primeval man was enabled to make independent comparisons between similar past and present situations, before making a decision and executing targeted actions.

Before the introduction of the reflection pause, human reaction to an altered situation was triggered instinctively without the mind that largely consisted of immediate sensory perceptions could be in the position to exert a volitional influence on it. This instinctive reaction was indispensable for the survival of the primeval man in the wild nature, where quick decisions on existential dangers had to be taken. That is why the first basic chakra (instinctive reaction center) was particularly developed in primeval men and women.

With the increase in the degree of social organization, the complexity of the options of how to react towards other people and nature, grew enormously. From now on, it was required that the incarnated personality had the opportunity to behave with greater individuality and more flexibility than before within this increasingly complex world. Parallel to the introduction of the reflection pause and its ongoing refinement, the diversification of the remaining six body chakras could be carried out. From now on, they did not any longer serve the mere survival of the individual, but could increasingly be freed up for the teaching of specialized skills (See “Evolutionary Leap of Mankind“).

These new abilities of the incarnated population, formed the energetic basis for the present civilization: art, literature, science and technology, are products of this progressive energetic evolution of the seven body chakras and the human Spirit. It is fair to say that the introduction of the reflection pause marks the beginning of the human ability for independent abstract thinking.

This ability is currently referred to as “intelligence” and its importance is grossly overestimated at the expense of human Intuition. Because the real mechanism of human intelligence – the reflection pause – still operates in most people automatically, below the perceptual limit of their daily consciousness, its existence and meaning is not recognized until today. Simultaneously with the introduction of the reflection pause, the ability of imagination was also developed, because with the help of this mental function also future consequences of each current action could be involved in the decision-making process.

The imagination is thus a spiritual-energetic process, a function of the human mind, where several probability alternatives are played out and their eventual outcomes compared without the direct experience of their consequences in the sequential 3D space-time. It is a gift of the soul to the human personality, as her creator that enables her to expand immeasurably her world of experiences. The imagination fosters decisively the mind, which becomes more and more accustomed to operate with a greater number of alternatives and to experiment existentially with their possibilities.

The widely discussed flexibility of the incarnated personality in the esoteric literature, for example, the repeated recommendation of many sources that one should not cling to existing structures and thought patterns, but refrain from this habit and start thinking transpersonally, is nothing else but a concrete invitation to use one's imagination in order to envision better life alternatives for oneself, and realize them through the abandonment of old habits and beliefs.

Imagination is the source of every act of creation, not only on earth, but also in the higher realms. All probability alternatives enjoy the same validity there, and have the energetic potential to be realized at any time, as well as in the 3D space-time. Their totality can be defined as the “fantasy of the higher realms” – it is the creative potential of the 7F-realms par excellence. The whole universe operates, or rather exists, according to the principle of creation and weighing of innumerable probability alternatives, whereby the principle of circular argument in physics is a concrete mathematical application of this propensity of the human mind.

The introduction of the reflection pause is a groundbreaking process in human history and has even found a special attention in the Bible. The Old Testament story of the “tree of knowledge” and of the “Expulsion from Paradise” presents this process figuratively in a naive mythological manner in the Book of Genesis (Genesis 2:4 – 3:24). The ability to distinguish between good and evil, that is, the ability to weigh several alternatives during the reflection pause until the optimal one can be chosen, is praised by the (wise) serpent in this narrative as the true “gift of God”: “The serpent said to the woman (Eve): “You surely will not die. God just doesn’t want you to eat the fruit from the Tree of Knowledge because he knows if you do, your eyes will be opened and you will understand the difference between good and evil. Eating fruit from the Tree of Knowledge will make you just like him.”

The fear of the primeval men and women, in this case of Adam and Eve, to lose their instinctive reaction with the introduction of the reflection pause, and from now on to rely entirely on their own judgments, is entirely justified and poses the real dilemma in the evolutionary development of the human mind. While the integrity of the primeval man was fully secured through the instinctive reaction of the basic chakra that fully eliminated (short-circuited) the underdeveloped human mind, from then on the primeval man and woman had to rely on their own judgments to survive. Because their ability to select the best alternative from the many probabilities that were made available to them was still very weak, the danger was great to make the “wrong” decision.

The primeval man knew in an infallible manner, that from then on, he had to wear the full responsibility for his decisions that determined his destiny. He was the sovereign creator of his environment and had also the probability alternative to destroy himself. This exemption of the incarnated personality from the unconditional protection of the soul, as long as the instinctive reaction was in operation and the survival of the incarnated personality guaranteed, and her gradual introduction to a self-sufficient, responsible creator of her own destiny, equipped with imagination and free will, was rightly perceived by her as very threatening: it was the proverbial expulsion of the primeval man and woman from the paradise of soul’s loving protection.

Since man refused, at the same time, to take over the responsibility for the introduction of the reflection pause and the free will, he had to invent the “myth of the snake seduction” and put it into circulation as biblical wisdom, so as to divert any blame from himself. This knee-jerk, anxiety-laden refusal to take full responsibility for decisions made and carried out by oneself, and instead to invent innumerable transparent apologies and countless conspiracy theories in order to excuse one’s own missteps, can be observed to the present day in almost all humans, be they politicians or ordinary citizens. As “Guilt and Atonement”, this basic theme permeates the entire young soul age cycle, which lasts on the average about 2,000 earthly years.

The myth of the snake seduction and the expulsion from paradise, is therefore an archetypal universal lie of immature humanity, and constitutes a major obstacle to Self-acknowledgment. This process is of great actuality today because the imminent Evolutionary Leap will again catapult present-day humanity out of its self-made paradise of “innocent ignorance” and will trigger similar primal fears and myths in the minds of the people.

One can highlight with the reflection pause another, equally important, aspect of current human thinking. At present the reflection pause is used by most people extremely unilaterally, only to distinguish good from bad alternatives (either-or logic) and is based on conditioned, unreflected prejudices and false beliefs. In this way, the people promote the mental tendency to draw clear dividing lines between the various external phenomena and to underpin this separation with arguments from a very narrow point of view. That is how the idea of the proverbial duality of human existence has been born; one finds it in religion, politics, everyday life, as well as in science. The overarching harmony and constructive interference of All Creation remains unnoticed by most people and this cognitive ignorance determines their limited world view.

All scientific theories that have been developed so far and are taught at schools and universities are local, limited exclusive explanations of All-That-Is. They build artificial barriers and dividing lines between the individual areas of human knowledge, and are a hindrance to the evolution of a free-inquiring human spirit; its transformation to the all-encompassing awareness of the higher realms is thus decisively prevented. The new theory of the Universal Law eliminates for the first time these artificial separations and allows a global (holistic) and coherent world view. With the arrival of the Evolutionary Leap, the importance of analytical thinking that is currently exclusively favored in education will diminish and the ability to think synthetically and holistically will come to the fore.

Transcendental Gnosis is a multidimensional energetic process like the soul herself. The human knowledge of the incarnated personality can be developed and expanded in its depth, intensity and prognostic reliability throughout her short sojourn on the earth only through a universal, creative and continuous education. This kind of education includes two dialectically connected aspects.

On the one hand, education should be acquired within the community, in schools and other institutions, and in this regard the pedagogical skills of the teacher, supported by clear social ideas about the educational goals, play a central role. On the other hand, knowledge is an inner process of the soul, who follows her own route in each incarnated personality. The insights which the personality gains in this way depend solely on her willingness to open up for the inspirations of the soul. Social circumstances and cultural imprints can promote or inhibit this pathway of inner insight, as can be currently observed in different factions of humanity.

The LBP is not just an increase in body frequencies, but in the first place a gnostic process that promotes and expands human awareness. One cannot complete this process successfully before acquiring and utilizing the necessary intellectual knowledge. Any meaningful processing of the manifold emotional fear-based patterns and beliefs of the present time requires distance and creative approach to all human feelings and ideas that can be only achieved by an enlightened person at the end of his incarnation cycle.

As the personality evolves to a “Man Without Features”, she prepares herself during her earthly lifetime for her existence as an immortal “multi-dimensional personality” that can dwell both in 3D space-time as well as in the higher dimensional realms. With the first ascension of a human being in the current End Time, which is described in Christian theology with the Greek word “parousia” (“The word “parousia” is mainly used in Christian theology to refer to the Second Coming of Christ”), the fear of death that currently paralyzes the collective soul of humanity will be overcome psychologically. The standardized procedure to leave this world will no longer be, at least for many old souls, the biological death but the personal ascension, during which the incarnated personality transfigures her carbon-based body into a crystalline silicon light body and acquires the omniscience of the higher dimensional realms. During her ascension she should not be drowned by the immeasurable astral knowledge that will flood her awareness, but should be mentally and energetically prepared for it. But also all the people who are still in the incarnation cycle will strive to become immortal and to express their multi-dimensionality on the earth.

My ongoing education was never oriented towards pragmatic goals, but was exclusively based on spiritual principles and the evolution of my personality. I followed this pathway under the close supervision of my Soul. However, I always took full personal responsibility for my autodidact evolution that brought me in constant contradiction and opposition to the official education system, which I had not encountered in this consequence and intensity in any other human being. This all prepared me for the LBP that can only be successfully completed when full clarity and alignment with true gnostic thinking is achieved. The reader can easily figure out that most of my intellectual pursuits were rigorously dismissed by my environment, sometimes in a pitiful manner, and sometimes in an aggressive manner, as idle and useless mental gimmicks, even at a time when all my predictions came true in astounding detail.

The point of view of most people, especially of the so-called “realists” who are very proud of their pragmatism, is extremely narrow; it is like a cone of light that only illuminates a tiny section of the reality and considers it to be the only relevant reality. Such realists reject all experiences and insights that lie outside this range because, due to their fears, they are unable to challenge their own ideas of the reality until these are profoundly shaken by a brutal external force. This is a major objective of my impending ascension.

For that reason, spiritual evolution is not just an idle intellectual and creative activity that takes place in solitude, but first and foremost the result of personal steadfastness – the willingness to oppose the ordinary opinions of the “realists”. The most difficult part is when these opinions come from your closest friends and relatives, and you have to experience with what vehemence they react to your justified rejection of their views and denounce this attitude in a prejudiced manner as a hurtful absence of love or lack of consideration. One can only gain distance to such co-dependent behavioral patterns if one knows intimately the anxiety-driven dynamics of the human psyche, and responds to such reactions with understanding, and not with compliance. From a higher perspective, the consistent, conscious fortitude against the false beliefs and behaviors of most common thinking people is a volitional expression of perfect, unconditional Love and the most thankless task on the earth.

After I was strengthened by these intense inner-soul experiences, became immune to any perishable social influences, and was equipped with an extensive in-depth knowledge, I finally stepped into the fifth decade of my life, when the odyssey of the greatest scientific and gnostic discovery in the known history of mankind took its inexorable course.

I will not point out all the convoluted pathways that I walked before and after the discovery of the Universal Law in bio-sciences and medicine, until I developed the General Theory of Biological Regulation in Volume III. I should just mention that at that time I read and analysed more than 10,000 scientific publications and many extensive standard textbooks, until I could prove the validity of the Law in every detail, down to the quantum level of the DNA, including proteins and other biochemical moieties. The extensive evidence in physics and mathematics in Volume I and Volume II, on the other hand, was relatively quick and smooth as soon as I had overcome my initial doubts on the adequacy of my physical expertise.

European philosophy knows innumerable writings on human Gnosis, but not a single useful description as to how gnostic knowledge unfolds psychologically, mentally and experientially in the human mind, and what inner-soul dynamics actually manifest it in the form of intuitive hunches, insights, revelations, somatic perceptions and rational arguments, which always precede and accompany any major scientific discovery. The feeling of shame, as a cellular anchored basic angst of humanity, has prevented such an introspective and very instructive evaluation.

During the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th century, such mental and spiritual phenomena were covered, or rather veiled, with the term, the “Genius”. In recent times, this term appears nowhere. One speaks instead of “IQ tests”, although until today no one knows for sure what “intelligence” is. This does not stop the scientists from measuring peoples’ intelligence with IQ tests. So much about the mental and spiritual confusion of present-day humanity! If I report here extensively about how my gnostic insights and knowledge came to me, I do this only to highlight for the first time this central, but hitherto completely neglected aspect of every intellectual endeavour.

At present, it is generally believed that human intelligence exists independently from the physical perception. For example, all IQ tests do not take into account the actual physical condition of the examined person, although already the ancient Romans knew that a healthy body harbors a healthy mind, and everyone knows from his own experience how fast the thinking capacity deteriorates in a state of physical fatigue. Conversely, present-day humanity is not at all familiar with the fact that gnostic knowledge and intellectual achievements are transmitted and fostered by the soul not only mentally, in the form of intuitive thoughts and insights, but are also mediated somatically.

through the physical body, before they can be mentally and emotionally processed.

Officially, the existence of the soul is denied by the majority of the people. The minority of the esotericists who believe in the existence of the soul, tend in their spiritual obsession to regard the body as an obstacle to their spiritual evolution and deliberately neglect it. The Christian-tainted belief concerning the alleged “duality of mind and body” promotes the view that the carnal demands of the body are a hindrance to the evolution of the human spirit. This very common view displays numerous facets. Neither in liberal arts, nor in Western science does one find even the slightest hint that the gnostic knowledge of the soul is mediated and promoted somatically – through direct sensations of the physical body.

This one-sided view on human intelligence as a mental phenomenon that stands in an antagonistic relationship to physical needs, is easily explained if one considers the level of development of the body chakras in the current incarnated human population. Because the majority of the world population consists of baby, child and young souls, their chakras are energetically separated and do not work in synchronicity. In most cases, there is an emphasis on the lower three chakras, which express the physical aspects of the survival instincts (1st chakra), sexuality (2nd chakra) and the exertion of power over others (3rd chakra). These chakras are separated from the upper three chakras of intelligence (5th chakra) and spirituality (6th and 7th chakra, also known together as the 3rd eye) by the 4th heart chakra, which is closed in most humans.

The conception of a mind-body duality can be traced back to this somatic experience of the separation of the seven body chakras. We recognize already in this example that every thought is ultimately somatically-energetically conditioned, as long as the soul dwells in an incarnated state. This reflective knowledge is not familiar to humanity. The usual interpretation of human intelligence as an independent of sexuality achievement, and even antithetical to it, illustrates merely the energetic separation of the body chakras in immature incarnated souls, who express this energetic somatic decoupling in a very unreflecting manner in their limited thoughts.

Even if the intelligence and linguistic abilities are currently mediated by the upper 5th chakra, these mental qualities must remain limited because they are not supported by the spiritual-ecstatic experiences (6th & 7th chakra) of unconditional love (4th chakra). Because of the immature soul age of the majority of souls incarnated on the earth, the sixth and seventh chakras are currently not energetically activated in most humans. This circumstance explains the lack of spiritual qualities in most people. Intellectually centered young souls with an emphasis on the 5th chakra, but with a closed 4th heart chakra, who exercise scientific professions have usually very limited, unspiritual knowledge and often convey the impression of “emotionally deprived professional idiots”.

Genuine gnostic knowledge can only be conveyed through and supported by a unified chakra which includes and synchronizes all the seven body chakras. For this reason the merging of the seven chakras into a unified chakra during the LBP has much in common with the Platonic Eros. In this way, the spiritually and medially inspired intelligence of the incarnated personality encompasses the sexuality as a physical experience of the ecstatic bliss of the higher dimensions and bestows carnal love with a new transcendent meaning. In this process, the power instinct of the 3rd chakra that is currently responsible for the manipulation of man and matter loses its relevance. The human species is heaved to a new level of spiritual and astral-energetic evolution.

These processes are completely unknown to humanity today. I will now close this gap in human knowledge by describing how my soul mediated the gnostic experience of the Universal Law to me in a direct somatic way, before I could handle it intellectually. In this way, I will put upside down all conventional ideas on human intelligence.

One day, shortly before the discovery of the Universal Law, while I was walking on foot to my office, I experienced out of the blue an incredibly powerful energetic gradient that flowed like a high-voltage electrical current through my whole body. I felt that the voltage came from the invisible cosmos and reached to the core of the earth. At that time, I dealt extensively with the famous Einstein's equation for the conservation of energy and mass: $E=mc^2$. I had not yet figured out that mass as a physical quantity is simply energy relationship, and that the two terms, mass and energy, are tautological paraphrases of the Primary Term within the framework of mathematical formalism. I felt for some time, with increasing intensity, that this equation was hiding a secret that Einstein had not unraveled. I was under tremendous mental constraint to decipher this puzzle and stared long hours in total mental absence at this equation.

This event happened in the spring of the year 1994. Shortly before that I had developed the new space-time symbolism from the primary term in order to better express the physical dimensions of all quantities as they are conventionally assessed through the SI system. I had already proved that many of these quantities can be reduced to space and time but did not yet expect that this symbolism would be at the heart of the new theory of the Universal law. I had not shown yet that all known SI dimensions can be reduced to these two constituents/ dimensions of space-time.

With the help of this symbolism, I intended to prove the validity of the Universal Equation $E = E_A f$, which I had first derived for the metabolism of the cell and with the help of which I could exactly calculate the entire metabolism of the human body consisting of trillions of cells. I wanted to investigate whether this equation was also valid for inanimate physical matter. As this equation assessed the energy exchange in a general way, I wanted to find out whether all physical laws may be reduced to this equation and thus show that they are simple mathematical derivations of the Universal Equation, as I later proved beyond any doubt.

In the beginning the task seemed impossible to me, as most physical laws and formulae in conventional physics do not assess energy exchange, but refer to various other physical quantities. I had no idea how I should bring all that diversity under one common denominator. Therefore, I first of all took Einstein's equation because it proved in a fundamental manner the equivalence between matter, defined as mass, and energy. This equation builds the basis of the theory of relativity and quantum mechanics. With its help one can, for example, calculate the rest mass and binding energy of the elementary particles in the nucleus, that is, the rest mass defect. This topic is basic stuff in quantum physics. For all readers who have no knowledge in physics, I will explain this topic in a popular scientific manner below.

The protons and neutrons exhibit, as singular elementary particles, a specific constant energy and mass. When they interact with each other, they undergo an energy exchange, and bind together to build the nuclei of atoms and molecules, which consist of several or more hadrons. During this nuclear reaction, a certain amount of energy which is defined as nuclear binding energy, is released. This is the energy of the photons that is emitted during this bonding of protons and neutrons in the nucleus. The released photon energy is equated to the nuclear binding energy.

In this case, the mass of the bound particles (as hadrons), that is, the mass of the nucleus is smaller than the mass of the unbound particles exactly by the mass of the emitted photons, as the law of conservation of energy demands. However, before the discovery of the Universal Law, all physicists, including Einstein, erroneously believed (and they still believe today) that photons have no mass and this created a hell of a mess in the entire physics as I show easily in the latest propaedeutics. This explains the total confusion of Einstein and all the physicists regarding his famous equation. According to their false perspective, this rest mass defect u in the nucleus can be calculated with the help of Einstein's equation $E=mc^2$ and vice versa: one measures the rest mass defect and determines the released photon energy. In this way, Einstein's equation proves, according to its conventional interpretation, the equivalence between matter defined as the mass of the bound particles in atoms and molecules and the energy, defined as the released photon energy during this bonding.

In the new physical theory of the Universal Law, energy is identical with the primary term of the new Axiomatics, and matter is, per definition, a subset of it, so that the two terms are by no means equivalent. Since photon space-time is also a particular subset of energy, which means it also has a mass, as this quantity is, according to its conventional definition in physics, an energy relationship, the law of conservation of energy fully applies to these two entities – matter and photon space-time – that engage in an incessant energy exchange. Exactly this simple fact is assessed by Einstein's equation in a general manner. Besides, there are a number of other conventional laws that also assess the energy exchange between matter and photon space-time, such as all the radiation laws, that I have also derived from the Universal Equation in Volume I and II.

As already said, I could not get rid of that very intense, almost obsessive foreboding that Einstein's famous equation was incomplete, and was misinterpreted by all the physicists in a fundamentally wrong manner. Over the course of several days, I turned the equation back and forth, and tried out new interpretations. I wrote the equation in the new space-time symbolism as $E = m[2d \text{ space-time}]$, where $c^2 = [2d \text{ space-time}]$. I was under high voltage for several weeks, and the energetic tension in my mind and body was unbearable. I had to think constantly about this simple equation.

Until that auspicious day, when I was on my way to my institute, deeply immersed in my thoughts about the Einstein equation, when a cosmic high-voltage energy bolt struck me so violently, that I almost fell over. I had to stop and catch my breath. The earth disappeared under my feet and I hung weightless in space. A forceful vision took full grip of my consciousness like a lightning bolt: in one single moment that seemed to take forever, I saw, figuratively, although there were no pictures in the conventional sense, how the earth, more precisely, all physical objects and all living beings, were formed and dissolved as energetic eddies along this cosmic energetic gradient that pervaded the entire universe.

It was a simultaneous, symbolic image of the universe, whose celestial bodies I perceived as an assembly of energetic protuberances. These energetic entities corresponded to the diverse objects and forms of matter and were formed and dissolved continuously from the innumerable energetic rays of this gargantuan cosmic gradient, that was flowing through my whole body. I perceived these rays with my inner eye – as I cannot say that I really saw them optically – as extremely fast vibrating filaments that traversed the entire cosmic space, including my body, and filled it with high-frequency energetic oscillations.

At that moment of enormous physical stirring, the idea of the world gradient $U = c^2$ was born in my mind (see Volume II for further details). I realized, in a flash, that the photon space-time builds the space, so that it is not empty, as physics currently claims. I suddenly knew that the space is formed by an extremely powerful energy gradient – ergo, the cosmic space is the world gradient. This world gradient is the driving force behind the emergence of inorganic matter and all living beings.

It was a real epiphany that captured my mind and paralyzed my body for a while. This extremely intense somatic perception of the world gradient, which as I later calculated, generated an enormous electric field strength in the magnitude of $1.10^{11} \text{V per meter}$ , became somewhat less intense in the next few days, but it stayed within me as an existential somatic experience for a very long time. The world gradient plays a central role in the new theory of the Universal Law, as it allows the integration of gravitation with electromagnetism and the other two fundamental forces, and abolishes the standard model (for further details see Volume I, Chap. 3.10, p. 80 and Volume II, as well as the new propaedeutics).

Over the following five years, while I was elaborating on and writing down the theory of the Universal Law, I felt the cosmic world gradient without interruption, but with varying intensity. Its vibrations encompassed not only my entire body, but also all my thoughts. Henceforth, I could perceive, in a direct somatic manner, the effects of the Universal Law behind all of the phenomena which I observed, although my five senses were not involved in this perception. How could they be? It was a transcendental experience beyond the known realm of sensory-material sensations.

The quality of the vibrations of the world gradient differed distinctly from that of the astral-somatic vibrations I had been experiencing for over five years during the LBP. If I could ever describe them, I would rather designate the vibrations of the world gradient as “long waves” that “carried me forward”. They predominantly affected my thoughts, and lent them an unusual clairvoyance and determination. The body was highly stimulated by these vibrations and experienced a tremendous activation and a motivation-like push. I was capable of undertaking every conceivable intellectual and physical effort. In addition, these vibrations did not produce a high-pitched tone around my head, as is the case with the vibrations during the LBP, which I have discussed in detail in my first gnostic book “The Evolutionary Leap of Mankind”.

In contrast, the vibrations during the LBP are of extremely high frequency and penetrate each and every cell of my body. The intensely vibrating higher dimensional energies flow from the Source through my upper, non-physical chakras (8th to 14th and even higher), which are now fully opened, as waves into my body, and produce a deafening, uninterrupted high-pitched tone around my head, that can be very annoying most of the time. The portal of entry is the left brain hemisphere, which is fully freed up for these energies. Sometimes the wave is so violent that it induces a state of commotio cerebri, and that is why I call such extreme waves a “cc-wave “. During a cc-wave, the left half of the head is severed from the right one, and is greatly reduced in its sensitivity, as if it were anesthetized. The cc-energy wave always induces an excruciating headache of which current medicine has no clue.

These astral energies flow along the left pyramidal tract that crosses with the right one in the brain, as one should know, and innervates the right half of the body. For that reason, the astral energies flow predominantly in the right half of my body and produce there a pronounced muscle rigidity and joint stiffness, which are sometimes associated with temporary coordination disorders. These symptoms have nothing to do with rheumatism, and one should not run to the doctor and ask for a detrimental treatment, as these symptoms disappear as soon as the current period of energetic transformation of the body is completed by the soul.

This condition usually lasts one to two days, until the astral waves have reached the lower body chakras and have begun to raise their frequencies. Because of that, after each such energy bout I regularly experience an acute gastrointestinal crisis, which is an expression of the energetic transformation of the 3rd chakra that anchors in the liver, pancreas and the adjacent gastrointestinal organs. Simultaneously, my airways are affected and I suffer from an asthma-like constriction of the airways, which can even stipulate to an acute broncho-pulmonitis that is accompanied by a severe pain in the airways, and violent burning in the chest area. It is important to stress at this place that the mucosal cells of the airways are the most sensitive cells to such energetic transformation and suffer the most. These symptoms occur as a result of the transformation of the 4th heart chakra. Subsequently, the lower two body chakras are affected and transformed; this transformation is usually accompanied with a temporary irritation or even acute inflammation of kidneys, bladder and urinary tract. The enhanced cell metabolism during such episodes leads to increased diuresis and higher excretion of uric acid and other biochemical moieties of cell degradation that are eliminated through the urinary tract, and may have a pungent smell.

In this way, the soul performs a profound transformation of the biological body while raising its frequencies. During this transformation, the body feels immensely exhausted, depleted and listless. This condition can improve within a few hours if necessary, for instance, when some existential tasks are pending. The vibrations of the astral energies change their quality and intensity all the time, so that in the meantime, I am in the position to distinguish more than 40 – 50 different qualities, and be able to predict their specific impact and symptoms on my body. This kind of expertise in the LBP hugely facilitates and mitigates the psychological experience of the imponderables of these altogether highly unpleasant waves. Such waves can last from a few hours to several days or even weeks.

Towards the end of the LBP, the waves become shorter, more intense, and heavier – and the energy intensity is no longer human. The whole space around my body, visible within a radius of up to 100 meters, is filled “to the brim” with these vibrations. In fact, my energy field encompasses the entire globe, and much more, as these energies come directly from the Source. They embody a unique accumulation of source energies within this 3D holographic model that is unprecedented in the history of mankind. The moment these energies manifest in this dense 3D reality, the psycho-mental situation of the entire humanity and this planet will change forever. A detailed description of the astral waves of the LBP is, however, beyond the scope of this book and should be reserved for a special technical book or articles (*N.B. see also these articles which I wrote later on: 1. No matter if I drove or walked, ate or sat in front of the computer, I felt during the time of the discovery of the Universal Law, how an invisible force field enveloped my body and let it float on an air cushion over the ground. This force field carried me forward with an irresistible intrusiveness and helped me immensely to write down the new theory of the Universal Law in a very short period of time. I could not resist its power, and I did not want to, because it also filled me with an ecstatic, enthusiastic bliss, that was previously unknown to me.

Since I first derived the Universal Law for organic matter, where its mode of action at the cellular level is closely related to the so-called FUELS (Functional Units of Energy transLocation), which are specialized transmembrane proteins of the cell (see Volume III), I had for more than a year, very lucid and vivid visions when I was looking at the trees in the forest. During that time, I had the strong desire to be in nature – to hike for a long time in the mountains or in the near-by forests. In my imagination, I saw optically with my 3rd eye, how these transmembrane proteins build the membrane potentials of the tree cells from the world gradient, whereby the sun's rays, precisely the photons, which the cells used for their photosynthesis, i.e. for their metabolism, were, in fact, a concrete system of the world gradient.

I could literally feel how the energy of the sun's rays fell onto the leaves of the trees and how they were transformed through photosynthesis into the electromagnetic energy of the membrane potentials of the tree cells, and how this stored energy was used for the cell metabolism and the growth of the trees: The photon gradient of the sun was figuratively showering from above onto the trees, and was converted into electrical energy of the membrane potentials, which at that time I interpreted as a kind of self-organization of organic matter, and how the trees grew higher and higher in the opposite direction against the gravitational force. It was an overwhelming symbolic vision of the elasticity of space-time, which I later summed up formally in a universal cognitive form as the “Axiom on the reciprocal behavior of two neighboring gradients of a system“. I was able to perceive and understand these processes very well, because the same world gradient was flowing through my own body at the same time: it was the same pantheistic feeling that I knew from my early childhood, but this time it was scientifically founded and rationally comprehended.

This simultaneous visual image of the energetic origin of all plants was so compelling and overwhelming in its congruence, that I engraved it forever in my memory. In this image, which I preserved alive and present as an archetypal thought in my scientific mind, I inserted later on all my factual knowledge of biochemistry, biology, physiology, medicine, immunology and genetics, without a single contradiction or inconsistency. However, this intellectual endeavour, which was actually a tedious detective search through the labyrinth of scientific blunders, took six years and required the analysis of countless publications and theoretical works before it was successfully completed in Volume III.

In this state of mental and physical excitement, I was carried forward by an indescribable spiritual inspiration and had to give up completely the person I used to be, and to subordinate all my thoughts and activities to the elaboration of the new theory. Over that period of time, I forgot about all my daily duties and responsibilities that arose from my previous life, which all of a sudden appeared irrelevant and meaningless to me. I dedicated myself to my new task with fervor and obsession that could only cause utter alienation and incomprehension in my environment.

Although at that time I was in big financial troubles, I did not care about it and I noticed, to my surprise, how the problems were miraculously resolved one after the other. The somatic and psycho-mental perception of the world gradient became an existential feeling; it was a supernatural sensual sensation of the ubiquitous validity of the Universal Law, which immeasurably expanded my previous limited experience, based only on my human corporeality. I lived in a permanent condition of an exalted pantheism and felt One with nature and the cosmos.

The disciples of Jesus must have felt something similar when the “Holy Spirit” entered their bodies at Pentecost (see above). They too were imbued for a very long time by a powerful astral force and accomplished deeds to which they were previously incapable, if one reads the Bible very carefully.

When I first perceived this “divine” power as an energetic gradient that conveyed to me the Oneness of All-That-Is, I experienced at the same time an indescribable clarity of thinking that expanded forever my consciousness. As soon as I came to my office, I sat down at my desk and derived the world gradient from Einstein's equation and determined its SI dimensions (See Volume I, chapter 3.10, p. 80. and Volume II). Now I had to prove that this world gradient, as a physical quantity, is identical by definition with the electric voltage (potential) or gradient as presented in electromagnetism.

My hands were trembling with excitement while I derived the many different mathematical formulae for electric gradient, which one finds in textbooks on physics, in the new space-time symbolism. I hugely benefited from the fact that as a student and high school graduate in Bulgaria decades ago, I had extensively practiced the derivation of SI dimensions and units in physical equations as to prepare successfully for the entrance exam in physics at the technical university in Sofia. After about an hour I was able to prove that all known equations of electromagnetic gradient have exactly the same dimensionality as that of the world gradient of the photon space-time: $c^2 = U = [2d \text{ space-time}]$.

At that point in time, I was not yet in the position to foresee all the consequences that resulted from this proof, and later on became part of the new physical theory of the Universal Law. The only thing that I knew at that moment with unmistakable certainty, was that the photon gradient is the source of creation of physical matter and of all plants and living organisms. It generates the electrical membrane potentials of the cells and organizes these to high-efficiency energetic units of organic matter. I had already calculated that the entire stored energy of the electrical membrane potentials of all cells of the human organism is equivalent to the effective energy obtained from metabolism, when the heat emitted to the surroundings is subtracted (See my comments on the energetic balance of the cell and human body metabolism in Volume III, chapter 1.2.).

After I had proved, with the help of the universal equation, the energy balance of the human body, I was convinced that this equation represents the mathematical shell of a natural law that is valid for both organic and inorganic matter. Because this formula assesses the energy conservation, which is known as the first thermodynamic law in physics, I was confident that I was on the right track. Nevertheless, I needed this very intense and persistent somatic experience of the world gradient to intellectually grasp this realization and work it out theoretically.

The implementation of this gnostic knowledge in physics proceeded in many steps. Every time when I made a major theoretical breakthrough and transcended the limits of previous physical knowledge, I felt in a very unpleasant manner strong reservations, whose origin lay in my previous scientific education and training. At the beginning, I considered these reservations as an expression of my objective critical judgment, which I still felt obliged to observe as a scientist at that time. I noticed, however, very soon that these reservations significantly slowed down my quest to move forward and make new exciting findings.

As soon as I could invalidate these conventional reservations, I sensed a clear relief. At the very moment in which they had disappeared from my consciousness, I could glide through the physical stuff without any resistance and made new discoveries that I did not previously consider to be possible. I soon realized that all my reservations were unfounded, educated pseudo-scientific considerations: they were useless leftovers of my conventional education and only established artificial barriers for my ever-expanding consciousness.

Because I have always liked to be in the role of the spiritual rebel, I solemnly took a vow to unconditionally let go of all scientific beliefs taught to me at school and at university, and from then on to progress unreservedly in my exploratory thirst. I have not regretted this willful decision to date, even if I had to acknowledge the futility of my long-standing academic education.

This long education was nevertheless not in vain: the throwing off of mental baggage and the destruction of conventional science bestowed me with such a sublime spiritual satisfaction which one can only experience in an act of divine creation. While I was working out the new theory of the Universal Law, I felt like the first human on the earth. I weaved the world anew with my thoughts, and bequeathed it to future generations in the form of a written teaching of eternal validity.

Another perception about this progressive dissolution of my previous scientific worldview became noticeable at that time. I read a lot of textbooks and journals, and had collected a stately library. Since childhood I had regarded books as an integral part of my life. And now I experienced, all of a sudden, in a kind of optical vision, how the books began to formally dissolve in my hands as soon as I began to scroll through them. With their seemingly physical disappearance, they also lost their meaning forever. Books, which I had previously appreciated, suddenly seemed irrelevant and worthless to me, like dusty, useless old volumes that one throws in the garbage.

In this context, I had very intense presentiments that the majority of all written works, which humanity has produced in its history, are misleading and irrelevant, and will no longer matter. Later on, I interpreted this direct sensual foreboding as a logical consequence of the new theory of Universal Law, with which I discarded all basic scientific ideas.

Since that time, I have read almost no scientific books anymore, because their epistemological errors make me very tired. I also need only a few seconds to scroll through a book to find out if it is of some value, or if it is completely wrong and superfluous. This impeccable judgment greatly facilitated the development of the new theory which I then advanced without any role models, and without any considerations of previous accepted opinions and renowned luminaries (I recommend the reader to study my annihilating analysis of the “great” performances of such thinkers as Newton and Einstein in Volumes I and II (N.B. or even better the new propaedeutics) as to realize the full extent of my deconstruction of these monuments in science. In order to rise up to this demanding task, I had to distance myself completely from all previous opinions, assessments and veneration.).

During that time, I experienced the worst anxiety attacks, which even though were justified by my difficult existential situation, were quite exaggerated, so that I wondered about that and observed them curiously as independent psychological phenomena. I had already withstood in my life so many blows, that I was not particularly impressed by these difficulties. Rather, I looked upon them as an incentive to intensify my scientific activities.

Looking back, I realize that the discovery process of the Universal law was at the same time the first decisive phase in my LBP, when my typical anxiety patterns and beliefs were energetically erased, and a fundamental reorientation of my world view was initiated. This mental change is yet to come for the rest of humanity and will be triggered by my ascension as the first multidimensional personality.

The full acceptance of the new theory of the Universal Law will take much longer, according to my estimation. It will probably take decades, if not centuries, depending on the timeline, until all incarnated human souls have understood it, just as there are still people today who have not yet internalized that the earth is round and turning around its axis (N.B. In this context, I would like to point out the obsolete idea of “flat earth” that has gained in recent years a great popularity and acceptance among the light workers community, and about which I had to lead exhausting discussions with some of my readers before I could convince them to give up this mental aberration.

This fact shows how slowly humanity evolves on the intellectual and spiritual ladder, and how easily relapses can occur.).
